'Auction' of U.S. Funds Seen by President

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON
Special to The New York Times
HOUSTON, Oct. 29—President Ford accused Jimmy Carter today of bidding for the political support of the nation's schoolteachers with the prospect of Federal tax dollars.

"You are too sophisticated, too experienced, too knowledgeable to simply throw your weight to the highest bidder," the President told 4,000 Wisconsin teachers on a day in which he zigzagged from Cleveland to Milwaukee to St. Louis to Houston.

"I owe you more than an auction for Federal education dollars," he declared, to applause from the members of the Wisconsin Education Association, an affiliate of the National Education Association, which has endorsed Mr. Carter.

Buoyed by a week of big crowds and constant claims of his strategists that the President is overtaking his rival, Mr. Ford was ebullient by the time he arrived here.

"I think we're neck and neck," he said of the race. "When you've got momentum the opposition is trying to put their fingers in every dike and trying to stop the erosion. Obviously, we've got the momentum going and they're frantic and frustrated and frenzied and, gee, I just feel good about it."

The elliptical, yet clear, criticism of the Democratic Presidential nominee's

Democrat Fearful of 'More Hard Times'

By JAMES T. WOOTEN

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 29—Before big, boisterous crowds in three cities today, Jimmy Carter intensified his steady attack on Republican economics, likening them to the pre-Depression policies of Herbert Hoover and warning of "more hard times ahead" if President Ford is elected next week.

LAST FIGURES BEFORE ELECTION

7 of September Items in Index Fell and 4 Rose—Ford and Carter Disagree on Significance

By EILEEN SHANAHAN
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Oct. 29—A group of economic statistics that sometimes gives accurate warning of an economic downturn declined in September for the second consecutive month, the Commerce Department reported today.

The decline of seven-tenths of 1 percent in the department's index of leading indicators was immediately seized upon by Jimmy Carter, the Democratic Presidential nominee, as fresh evidence that the economy was again in trouble.

President Ford and his economic advisers, on the other hand, discounted the importance of the statistics.

The forecasting record of this particular index is somewhat mixed. Since 1948, when the index was first compiled, there have been three occasions when it declined for two or more straight months without being followed by an overall economic downturn.

Comment Offered
The swiftness and intensity of the comment on the figures, by both Ford and Carter forces, reflected the importance attached to the economic issue by both sides in the campaign and also the fact that these are the last broad economic statistics to be published before election day.

The Ford forces apparently feared the impact of publication of the index so much that both Alan Greenspan, the

Rizzo Could Hold Key to Carter Victory Over Ford in State

By R. W. APPEL JR.
Special to The New York Times
PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 29—The Carter campaign in this state hangs together by a slender thread, Joseph Timilty said Wednesday night—and this morning the thread very nearly broke.

Mr. Timilty, a Boston Irishman with a lopsided grin and a taste for political infighting, is Jimmy Carter's coordinator in Pennsylvania. He has spent most of the last 60 days trying to keep the state's faction-ridden Democratic Party from exploding and thereby costing the party's Presidential candidate 27 key electoral votes, which once seemed safely his but now appear to hang in the balance.

Yesterday, Mr. Timilty learned that Mayor Frank L. Rizzo of Philadelphia would refuse to attend a downtown rally at noon today because the Carter staff had also invited some of the leaders of the abortive recall drive against the Mayor this summer.

The reason is simple: Mr. Rizzo is the power in Philadelphia politics, and Philadelphia is the power in Pennsylvania politics. If the Mayor told his minions to sit on their hands next Tuesday, the Carterites feared, President Ford would surely carry the state.

Finally, Mr. Rizzo was persuaded to meet Mr. Carter aboard his chartered plane, Peanut One, at the Philadelphia airport, but only after a call from "a prominent Democrat in Washington" persuaded former Senator Joseph S. Clark, a recall leader, to stay away. Mr. Rizzo said he had told the Democratic Presidential nominee that he would "win big" in Philadelphia, perhaps by 300,000 votes.

Seoul's Intelligence Agents Harass Korean Community in Los Angeles

By ROBERT LINDSEY
Special to The New York Times
LOS ANGELES, Oct. 29—The 70,000-member Korean community here—the largest concentration of Koreans outside the Orient—is being systematically intimidated by members of the South Korean Central Intelligence Agency, according to community leaders and law enforcement officials.

Koreans who are critical of the South Korean President, Park Chung Hee, have suffered reprisals ranging from economic boycotts to beatings, the officials said.

A Korean-language newspaper here, New Korea, lost most of its advertising after the editor criticized President Park. A Korean immigrant who criticized the Seoul Government recently received a telephone call the next day from a black-belt karate expert who he said had been hired by the Korean intelligence agency and threatened to beat him if he made such remarks again.

Market Is Resisting New M.A.C. Bonds

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN
The Municipal Assistance Corporation, faced with a requirement to raise cash for New York State's roads next month, said yesterday that lingering market resistance to its securities was forcing it to turn to local banks and state-controlled funds to absorb most of a new offering of $250 million in bonds.

Kissinger Is Willing To Stay, Aides Say

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Oct. 29—Henry A. Kissinger's closest aides say they are virtually certain that if President Ford wins the election Tuesday Mr. Kissinger will agree to remain at least two more years as Secretary of State.

Mr. Ford has publicly and privately informed Mr. Kissinger that he wants him to stay in office, and Mr. Kissinger's associates say that he seems as eager as ever to continue his African and Middle East diplomacy, to contact the new Chinese leaders and to negotiate an arms-control accord with the Russians.

So far, however, Mr. Kissinger has kept his plans to himself and has sometimes appeared to enjoy teasing his associates and reporters who try to extract a flat answer from him.

But if Jimmy Carter is elected, Mr. Kissinger's decision will, of course, be

Inquiry Raises Possibility That U.S. Citizens Work Illegally for Seoul

By RICHARD HALLORAN

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29—A newly disclosed Justice Department investigation into organizations and persons connected with the controversial Rev. Sun Myung Moon has raised the possibility that American citizens are illegally working on behalf of the South Korean Government.

The Foreign Agents Registration Act requires that all persons, American citizens and foreign nationals alike, who represent a foreign government or act to promote that government's interests, must register as foreign agents with the Department of Justice. The department is in charge of the current investigation.

The Federal officials familiar with the inquiry were careful to assert that Mr. Moon himself and his Unification Church were not being investigated, because Constitutional questions of freedom of religion might be raised. Instead, the inquiry is focusing on organizations associated with the church.

One Element in Broad Inquiry

The Federal sources indicated that among the organizations under scrutiny were the Korean Cultural and Freedom Foundation, the Freedom Leadership Foundation, headed by Neil A. Sennett, the International Federation for Victory Over Communism, and the Little Angel of Korea, a children's singing group that tours overseas.

This investigation is one element in a broad inquiry that includes allegations that Park Tong Sun, a Korean businessman, and others bribed Congressmen and tried illegally to influence American policy. It also includes an investigation of whether officers of the K.C.I.A. coerced and violated the civil rights of Koreans living in America and Korea-American citizens.

The South Korean Government, according to both Korean and American officials, has long been eager to improve the image of President Park Chung Hee and his administration. South Korea's economic development, and therefore some of its political stability, depends heavily on trade and financial help from the United States.

Most important from the Korean point of view is the continued American commitment to South Korea's defense through the existing mutual security treaty and the presence of 40,000 American troops in South Korea.

Pak Declined Interview

Among the earliest missions with that objective was that of the Korean Cultural and Freedom Foundation, founded in 1964. Its head, Pak Bo Hi, joined it in early 1965, shortly after he resigned from the South Korean Army.

Mr. Pak, who is 47 years old, joined the army during the Korean War and was assigned to the interpreter officer corps, where he polished the excellent English he is said to speak. Mr. Pak, who declined to be interviewed, joined the Reverend Moon's church in 1961.

During the mid-1960's, Mr. Pak told a one-time family friend of his plans for the foundation. The friend, Robert W. Roland, a former airline pilot, said in Congressional testimony last year that Mr. Pak described it as a front organization, and that it would be used to gain influence with wealthy people, and Government officials.

Mr. Roland, testifying under oath, said "Pak indicated that his primary aim was to establish influential contacts with the Government and social elite of the nation's capital." He also testified that Mr. Pak "talked very clearly about using it as a fundraising organization for the Moon organization."

Called Channel to Moon

Korean intelligence sources said that Mr. Pak is the K.C.I.A.'s channel to Mr. Moon. A Korean with access to K.C.I.A. reports said that "Pak Bo Hi is a very important man because he made Sun Myung Moon famous. It's all his idea."

A former Korean diplomat has testified before a Congressional subcommittee that Mr. Pak has access to equipment at the Korean Embassy to communicate with Seoul. The former diplomat also said that Mr. Pak was present at an important 1971 meeting with President Park, Park Tong Sun, and senior K.C.I.A. officials in the Blue House executive mansion in Seoul when strategy for influencing the United States was planned.

Mr. Pak, according to American sources with access to intelligence information, relayed the orders from Seoul in 1973 for followers of Mr. Moon to begin an energetic campaign in support of President Richard M. Nixon, then besieged with the Watergate scandal. President Nixon was considered by the South Koreans to be vigorously anti-Communist, to be a supporter of President Park because South Korea had sent troops to fight in South Vietnam, and to be better for Korea than an unknown successor.

In December 1973, some of Mr. Moon's adherents began a 40-day fast and prayer for Mr. Nixon. More than 1,000 people carrying signs showed up when the President illuminated the national Christmas Tree. They held rallies in Lafayette Square, across from the White House, and demonstrated for Mr. Nixon when he attended an annual White House press breakfast at a Washington hotel.

The Moon organization also placed full-page ads in newspapers in 21 cities at a total cost of $73,000.

New York Accuses Seoul Agency

ALBANY, N.Y., Oct. 29 (UPI)—The Korean Cultural and Freedom Foundation, with offices in Washington and Seoul, was charged with violations of New York's laws on charitable fundraising today, the state Board of Social Welfare announced.

The investigation involved $1.5 million collected by several subsidiary charity programs, including one which raised $1.3 million and distributed only $122,673 for the intended program, according to a statement released by the board.

Bernard Shapiro, the board's executive director, said the State Attorney General had been asked to obtain a stay having the agency from further solicitation in the state.

Korea. The exodus of such money has increased sharply, according to banking sources, since the fall of South Vietnam, which led to fears the United States might not act to block a North Korean invasion of South Korea.

According to banking officials and other people, hundreds of wealthy businessmen have smuggled large amounts of cash out of South Korea during the last two years and invested in California real estate and small businesses, particularly liquor stores, bars and small grocery stores.

Expensive Homes Purchased
It is not uncommon for real estate agents in some affluent communities here to tell stories of Korean wives who arrived here to buy homes costing more than $100,000 and paid for them in cash, sometimes out of paper bags.

A Korean-language newspaper reported that a former colonel in the South Korean Marine Corps, Kim Hae Yung, who is said to have close ties to the Korean Central Intelligence Agency and who has organized a pro-Government organization called the Korean-American Marine Association, had purchased a liquor store for $100,000 in $100 bills. He had denied any improprieties.

More than 60 Korean corporations have established offices here and, according to banking sources, a number routinely pad their operating budgets by large amounts. The executives of the companies then channel this money into personal investments, the sources say.

Many Korean business executives and, in some cases, Government officials have sent their wives and children here while they continue to work in South Korea. These executives regularly send large amounts of money to this country that are then invested in businesses or homes or other real estate, with the expectation that the head of the family will join the others here later, according to the sources.

"There is an amazing amount of money coming in," said a Korean-speaking attorney here whose clients include some of these newcomers. "I know of one man who owns a big business in Korea. His son has bought a $150,000 home here, has a $400,000 business, and is now buying a $250,000 business; he is less than 30 years old."

The Los Angeles telephone book lists more than 1,000 subscribers under the name of Kim, the most common Korean family name, an indication of the size of the Korean population here. Most of the middle-income immigrants have settled along Olympic Boulevard, which is lined with shops and restaurants catering to the Koreans, their signs dotted with Korean language characters.

The neighborhood is clean and well taken care of, and the immigrants have earned considerable respect here for their enterprise and willingness to work hard. "I don't think any ethnic group in Los Angeles has risen so fast and worked as hard—there's something dynamic about what they've done," Joseph Sureck, district director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, said.

Nevertheless, the community is plagued by problems of high unemployment, especially among young people, by crime and growing juvenile delinquency, by language problems and other classic difficulties of assimilation in a new society.

"There's still racial prejudice—it still exists—against Asians, especially in promotions for jobs," said Frank Chang, president of the Korean Community Council, which is seeking to help the immigrants adjust.

The Koreans here who are close to the Seoul Government contend that only a small proportion of the Korean immigrants care much about what goes on in Korean politics and that the vast majority are concerned about making a living in a new country.

"There is a K.C.I.A. all right," said Andrew Kim, editor of the pro-Government Korean-American Herald. "However, they are strictly here to protect the South Korean residents from the harassment of North Korean spies. The Korean consulate has an obligation to protect South Koreans, and so there are K.C.I.A. agents attached to it."

Dr. Hyung I. Kim, professor of philosophy at the California State University, Long Beach, and president of the Korean Association of Southern California, which some investigators have linked with the South Korean C.I.A., said:

"Most of the people in South Korea are in agreement with the present Government. They support him [President Park] because of the modernization and improvement in the standard of living—the Government is actually very popular."

Increasing numbers of Koreans here, according to knowledgeable sources, have been carrying guns, partly because of gang fights, partly because of conflicts with the Government's karate specialists. Police Sergeant Meyerhoff said there had been four shootings reported during the last two years and declared: "I'd say only one out of 10 crimes is reported because the people are afraid of authority. All these totals stem from [disputes over] American aid to Korea."

He recalled the incident of the beating victim who disappeared. "He was willing to talk about it, and when we came back several days later to get more information, we found that he had gone back to Korea. We never did get to have a prosecution because nobody would go on the record.

"Actually, the K.C.I.A. doesn't seem to mind the news of beatings and other violence that gets out," Sergeant Meyerhoff added. "About a year and a half ago there was a rumor about a Korean dissident being put on a plane for Seoul—we could never confirm it but it had a profound effect nevertheless. Even today, there are still a lot of people who are afraid this will happen to them."

Kim Woon Ha came here he said, after the intelligence agency had forced him out of his job as an assistant city editor of Chosun Ilbo, one of South Korea's largest daily newspapers, because of reports critical of the Government. He asserts that he has continued to be persecuted by the K.C.I.A. here, where he edits the anti-Government New Korea, a weekly.

Because of anti-Government statements in his paper, he said, Korean Airlines, the South Korean national carrier, canceled a major advertising campaign and other advertisers and subscribers dropped out because of harassment by the Government. He asserts that representatives of the Government recently offered him $30,000 if he would stop the criticism.

When he left Korea more than four years ago, Mr. Kim had to leave his three children behind, he said. He asserted that K.C.I.A. agents in Korea "tried to turn my children against me" and declared: "They sent agents to my office last year and told me if I didn't stop criticizing the Government, 'You and your children will be retaliated against'; they also said they could detain my children in Korea."

Mr. Kim said he had warned the agents that if they did not let his children come here, he would take the case to United States authorities. "And I threatened to go underground if they retaliated against my children," he said.

There are two underground movements here aimed at restoring democracy in Korea," he went on. "The movements have a policy that if the Korean Government retaliates against any person trying to restore democracy in Korea, the movements will use violence against the relatives of Korean Government officials here."

The children were finally allowed to leave South Korea several months ago after Mr. Kim complained of the harassment to a House of Representatives subcommittee.

Australian Uranium Mining Backed

SYDNEY, Australia, Oct. 29—A Government-ordered inquiry into the uranium industry in Australia has decided that the mining and export of the ore should go ahead subject to the imposition of tight controls.

The inquiry was set in motion by the former Labor Government 18 months ago under Justice-Russel Walter Fox, who delivered the report yesterday.

The inquiry began as an investigation into the environmental aspects of mining in the Ranger field in the Northern Territory but gradually expanded to include the whole question of whether Australia's vast uranium deposits—estimated at 20 percent of the known world reserves—should be made available as a world energy source.

The issue has aroused widespread controversy, with conservationists headed by a group called the Friends of the Earth opposing the mining of uranium and other groups calling for its export as an important factor in Australia's foreign earnings.

A second report is still to come dealing with the environmental aspects of the Ranger proposal for the Northern Territory. Justice Fox recommended that any decision on mining the huge reserves in the Northern Territory be postponed until the second report was out.

Development of the uranium industry had almost come to a halt over the last four years as a result of the imposition of severe Government limitations on exports, which amounted to a virtual embargo. Earlier, exports had been on a modest scale, but new finds had raised expectations that Australia would become a major uranium exporter, with Japan as a key market.

The major deposits are in the Northern Territory, a vast area in north central Australia, where the two biggest fields, Ranger and Jabiruka, have reserves amounting to about 150,000 tons.

Report Spurs Stock Sales

SYDNEY, Oct. 29 (Reuters)—Buyers rushed today to snap up Australian uranium shares following the Government commission's cautious go-ahead for the mining of the country's vast uranium reserves. The scenes at the Sydney Stock Exchange were reminiscent of the time of the Australian mining boom six years ago.

Light Battle Mars Lebanon Truce

By HENRY TANNER
Special to The New York Times

LEBANON, Oct. 29—Lebanon's calm despite tonight's shooting, held up today despite overnight fighting between right-wing Christian and leftist Muslims in the eastern part of the capital.

Men for the Phalangists, the Christian political and militia reported that 36 gunmen had been killed in a skirmish at an intersection between Muslim and Christian neighborhoods.

A captain killed by sniper troops assigned to the peacekeeping force were assembled, beginning early today.

Destroyed Japanese Buildings
ATA, Japan, Saturday, Oct. 30—A huge fire raged out of control in a city in northwest Japan today, destroying 1,000 buildings, the police said.

calm despite last night's shooting. But the automobile of the commander of the peacekeeping force was reported to have come under gunfire as it crossed the line between Muslim-held west Beirut and Christian east Beirut.

There has been tension also in the hilly area called Chouf southeast of the capital, where Christian and Muslim Druse villages are interspersed close enough to make the inhabitants uncomfortable.

A Druse captain of the Lebanese Army was killed yesterday near the Christian town of Beit Eddin, reportedly by a sniper.

Kamal Jumblatt, the Druse leader and head of the leftist-Muslim alliance, whose home town is in the Chouf, was reported to have intervened to prevent a reprisal attack on Beit Eddin by Druse units.

The inability of Mr. Sarkis to make any progress toward political normalization has prevented the President, who was sworn in more than a month ago, from receiving Muslim political figures and appointing a Prime Minister, who under the prevailing Lebanese system must be a Sunni Muslim.

3 Egyptians Are Killed And Many Are Injured In Election Disturbances

CAIRO, Oct. 29 (Reuters) — Prime Minister Mamiouh Salem and three members of his Cabinet have been elected to the People's Assembly, Egypt's parliament, in elections yesterday marred by clashes that took at least three lives and caused many injuries.

Mr. Salem belongs to the so-called center group of the Arab Socialist Union, Egypt's only political organization. Under President Anwar el-Sadat's liberalization measures, the A.S.U. has become an umbrella for right-wing, centrist and left-wing groups.

The leader of the leftist group, Khaled Mohieddin, was elected to the Assembly with a large majority. First results of the election indicated that the centrists were leading, followed by the right-wing and independents who refused to join the three A.S.U. groups.

Voting was quiet in Cairo and Alexandria but clashes broke out in other parts of the country. Political parties were abolished in Egypt 24 years ago after the Nasser revolution.

The elections yesterday were part of President Sadat's efforts to restore a multiparty system.

Special to The New York Times

LISBON, Oct. 29—Portugal's ruling Socialist Party will define its new political line and attempt to resolve serious internal differences at its second national congress meeting here this weekend.

Prime Minister Mario Soares conceded that the fate of his three-month-old minority Socialist Government will depend largely on whether the party can achieve "unity and cohesion" at the three-day congress.

Evidence of the importance of the Socialist meeting was the announcement that 55 foreign delegations would attend, including the leaders of West European Socialist parties such as Bruno Kreisky, Chancellor of Austria; Willy Brandt, former Chancellor of West Germany; and François Mitterrand of France.

Mr. Soares is the undisputed leader of the Portuguese Socialist Party and is expected to be re-elected as secretary general without difficulty.

The major issues dividing the party, according to Mr. Soares, are the Government's policies on education, labor and agrarian reform. The tensions began to attract interest only recently with a series of conflicting statements and declarations by Socialist leaders and commissions.

Landslide Blocks Italian Railway

DOMODOSSOLA, Italy, Oct. 29 (AP)—A landslide early today blocked the main railway link between Italy and Switzerland north of here after three consecutive days of heavy rain in northern Italy. The landslide covered both tracks of the line near the village of Varzo, six miles from the Swiss border and near the entrance to the Stigona railway tunnel. Trains were rerouted on long detours, and officials said it might take weeks to clear the line.

PARTY URGED TO OUST 4 ACCUSED CHINESE

Province Calls for the 'Severest' Punishment of Mao's Widow and Other Senior Leftists

By FOX BUTTERFIELD
Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, Oct. 29 — A Chinese province called today on the Central Committee of the Communist Party to expel Mao Tse-tung's widow, Chiang Ching, and three other senior leftists from the party and deal them the "severest punishment."

It was the first specific call for punishment of the leftists since they were arrested nearly three weeks ago.

But at the same time, there were indications from other provinces that the current attacks on the four top leftists would not be turned into a major nationwide purge of their supporters.

So far there has been little official information on the fate of the four leftists, who have been accused of a wide variety of charges ranging from tampering with Chairman Mao's directives to trying to seize power from the new party chairman, Hua Kuo-feng. In addition to Miss Chiang, the accused are Chang Chun-chiao, the senior Deputy Prime Minister; Wang Hung-wen, the youthful second-ranking member of the party; and Yao Wen-yuan, the party's chief propagandist.

Held Top Jobs in Shanghai
The last three accused have reportedly now been stripped of the additional posts they held in Shanghai, where they occupied the three top jobs on the city revolutionary committee. A wall poster put up in Shanghai yesterday said the Central Committee had decided to take away "all their posts both inside and outside the party in Shanghai."

According to another wall poster in Shanghai, the places formerly held by Mr. Chang, Mr. Wang and Mr. Yao have now been given to two alternate members of the Politburo from Peking and a neighboring provincial leader. They are Su Chen-bua, the chief commissar of the Chinese Navy and an alternate member of the Politburo, who will be the new chairman of the Shanghai revolutionary committee; Ni Chih-fu, a former Shanghai worker who is also an alternate member of the Politburo; and Peng Chung, the first party secretary of Kiangsu Province.

The first official call for punishment of the leftists came from coastal Fujian Province. A telegram to the Central Committee from Fujian Province, the city of Fochow, its capital, and the Fukien Front military command "strenuously demanded that the 'gang of four' be expelled from the party for life and be given the severest punishment."

Carried Only in Chinese
The telegram was reported today by the official Chinese press agency, Hsinhua, though only in its Chinese and not in its English-language service.

A ranking Chinese official in Peking said yesterday that Miss Chiang and the three other leftists would not be executed, but added that their crimes were so great that they could not be politically re-educated.

An Kang, the deputy editor of the party paper, Jenmin Jih Pao, told a delegation of French journalists that the four leftists had become "the sworn enemies of the people" and "their crimes are unforgivable."

"There is no possibility of self-criticism for them," Mr. An added. "There is a U.S. Did Not Bar Computer-System Sale to Soviet

By LESLIE H. GELB
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29 — An executive of Control Data Corporation said today that his company has received Administration approval to sell computer systems of comparable capability to the Soviet Union and China, and this was confirmed by Administration spokesmen.

James J. Bows, a vice president of Control Data, said that the Cyber 73 computer system being prepared for delivery to the Soviet Union is the equivalent of the two Cyber 172 computer systems approved for sale to China.

The New York Times erroneously reported yesterday that the Administration had no intention of licensing the sale of the same Cyber system to the Soviet Union. Thus, the Administration has not breached its long-standing policy of selling high-technology items to one Communist superpower only if it is prepared to sell comparable items to the other.

Some of the high Administration officials who told The New York Times yesterday that the Cyber system would not be sold to the Soviet Union were contacted today and asked for an explanation.

Military Capability Denied
One said that he was completely unaware of the sale to the Soviet Union. Another said that he must have been misunderstood, that he had not meant to imply an exception to policy, but an exception on safeguards.

Mr. Bows also denied that the Cybers had been sold for making calculations on oil exploration and earthquake detection had any value for making calculations for military purposes beyond a hand-held calculator.

He was supported in this view by State Department spokesmen who stated that while any computer could be used for military purposes, the two Cyber models were not of any special or additional value for military purposes.

Officials of several different agencies, including the Pentagon and the Energy Research and Development Administration, continued to insist however, that similar Cyber systems have been used by the United States in making calculations of nuclear tests and in controlling radars.

As one Commerce Department official put it, "If there were no potential military applications there would have been no reason to take a full year to review the sale and no reason to impose safeguards on the use of the equipment."

Safeguards Called Adequate

Officials of every agency involved, with the exception of the Energy Research and Development Administration, said today — as was reported yesterday — that the provisions for monitoring and inspecting the use of the computers were fully adequate to prevent diversion to military uses.

These officials again said that the safeguards in the sale to China were not as stringent as those generally prevailing for comparable transfers of technology.

They said that the principal difference was that whereas the Soviet Union had been required and prepared to give government-to-government assurances that the equipment would have only uses, China was being permitted similar assurances to the Control Corporation alone. They relate China has been unwilling to give government-to-government pledges so the United States retained its relations with the Republic of Taiwan.

A variety of officials again said that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger reportedly have to do with minor details regarding supervisory servicing of the computers.

Kissinger Said to Be Involved
A variety of officials again said that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger reportedly have to do with minor details regarding supervisory servicing of the computers.

The Cyber 172 is described as a "low end" of the general purpose computers and more than 70 have been sold since it was introduced several years ago. Officials said that the sale of the Cyber 73 to the Soviet Union was approved Sept. 30 and the Cyber 172 to Taiwan Oct. 12.

President Ford defended the sale, saying that it had been approved by concerned agencies. He added that the decision was anything but a "low end" of the general purpose computers and more than 70 have been sold since it was introduced several years ago. Officials said that the sale of the Cyber 73 to the Soviet Union was approved Sept. 30 and the Cyber 172 to Taiwan Oct. 12.

THIS SUIT AT FINE STORES NATIONWIDE $260

AT THE NEW YORK MANUFACTURER $149

Less than one year ago, Saint Laurie, a fine men's clothing manufacturer for 63 years, introduced a unique selling concept in New York.

What started as a gratifying response, has built into an ever growing legion of extraordinarily dressed, true believers.

The concept is simple: Saint Laurie sells their exquisitely tailored classic American and European cut suits to the most expensive stores throughout the country.

They will continue to sell to stores in New York, but not under the Saint Laurie label, and offer their vast collection (over 25,000 suits) direct to the consumer.

Nothing like Saint Laurie exists in New York. To our knowledge, anywhere.

The enormous selection, impeccable tailoring, costliest fabrics with prices at the factory ranging from $115 to $210, turns the most critical shopper into a delighted customer.

If smashing suits are important to your business or personal life and you've been spending $275 to $300 for them at better stores, come to Saint Laurie and see what feeling and looking good is all about.

The low-tar cigarette that doesn't cheat your taste.

It seems hard to believe. Most low-tar cigarettes are low-taste cigarettes. So who's kidding who? If Pall Mall Extra Mild has only 7 mg. tar, how can it be an exception? The reason Pall Mall Extra Mild is de-tarred, but not de-tasted is because it has the Air-Stream filter that reduces tar—but not taste.

What's more Pall Mall Extra Mild starts with really great tasting tobaccos. Tobaccos specifically selected for extra mild taste. And when you've got great taste to begin with, you've got great taste to end with. Try a carton. You'll find it hard to believe you're smoking a cigarette with less tar than 95% of all cigarettes sold!

University of Cali Told to Bar Race

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 29—The University of California's Board of Regents has been ordered to refrain from using race as a criterion for special programs.

The order came from District Court Judge Robert F. Peckham, who said that the university's policy of giving preference to minority students in its law school was unconstitutional.

Mr. Peckham said that the university's policy violated the Equal Protection Clause of the Constitution. He ordered the university to stop using race as a criterion for special programs.

The suit was originally filed by a white applicant who was denied admission to the law school because of his race. The university argued that its policy was necessary to achieve its goal of increasing the number of minority students.

The court said that the university's policy was not a quota system and that it was necessary to achieve its goal. However, the court said that the university's policy violated the Equal Protection Clause.

The court ordered the university to stop using race as a criterion for special programs. It also ordered the university to pay the applicant's legal fees.

Teamsters' Pension Fund Choices Arouse New Demands for Cleanup

By LEE DENBART

Frank E. Fitzsimmons, president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters and Roy L. Williams, who was twice acquitted of charges of embezzling union funds, will remain on the new board of trustees of the union's major pension fund, the fund announced yesterday.

In addition, the six new trustees named yesterday to the reorganized board of the Central States, Southeast and Southwest Areas Pension Fund include three representatives of the union who were described by a teamster watchdog group as "beholden to the old trustees."

"What kind of cleanup is this?" asked John C. Sikorski, acting executive director of Prod, the watchdog organization. "They're keeping the two guys, Fitzsimmons and Williams, who have been in this muck the longest. Once again this shows that the fund is not genuinely intent on cleaning itself up. It's just a miserable p.r. stunt."

Representative J. J. Pickle, Texas Democrat, a constant critic of the fund, announced that he and Representative Charles A. Vanik of Ohio, chairman of the oversight subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee, had decided to poll the members of the subcommittee on whether to hold hearings into the fund.

No "Hint of Reform"

"When I first learned that the teamsters were planning to reorganize the Central States Pension Fund, I warned that the changes may be only cosmetic," Mr. Pickle said. "Today's announcement by the teamsters proved to be less than that. It does not give even the slightest hint of reform."

But the Labor Department, whose year-old investigation into the fund brought about the resignations of 12 of the 16 prior trustees, said it would wait and see how the new board acted before passing judgment.

"We've gotten some of the worst people out of there," said a spokesman for the department. "We've gotten a new majority in. We're still there, and we've still got the investigation going. We view the restructuring as a constructive step. Time will tell on the prudence of the new board."

In addition to Mr. Fitzsimmons, who has been a trustee since November 1962, and Mr. Williams, who has been a trustee since the fund was established in February 1955, two management trustees were named. They are John F. Spickerman Sr., a trustee since November 1962, and

Pauling Study Suggests Vitamin C Prolongs Lives of Cancer Patients

By HAROLD M. SCHMECK JR.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29—Dr. Linus Pauling and a physician in Scotland have published a report asserting that vitamin C can prolong the lives of persons in the final stages of incurable cancer.

Their report, covering 100 patients, is published in the October issue of the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences. The mean survival time of the patients treated with vitamin C was about 210 days, according to the report, but only 50 days for a comparable group of patients who did not receive the vitamin.

The study involved only "terminal" cancer patients. These were patients considered hopeless after all conventional methods of treatment had failed. The vitamin was given as a dietary supplement.

A spokesman for the National Cancer Institute said that the study was of interest to the institute although the comparability of the two groups of patients in the study in Scotland might be questioned. The cancer institute is studying vitamin C as a supplement to the treatment of lung cancer patients. No results from this study are available yet.

Dispute on Aid for Colds

Dr. Pauling, winner of two Nobel Prizes, has been an outspoken advocate of vitamin C as an aid to health. His contention that the vitamin is valuable in coping with the common cold has led to much controversy and considerable research. For example, in a report this week in The New England Journal of Medicine, one research team concluded that vitamin C does not seem effective in treating or preventing colds and other upper respiratory illness, although, after an earlier study, the same group said that some benefits might exist.

Three employees of R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company sample cigarettes' taste as part of volunteer panel of experts

Low-Tar Cigarettes Creating a 'Revolution'

By WAYNE KING

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C.—Each weekday morning before he begins his job in the flavor application section of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, 41-year-old John Shore puts in a stogie as a member of the company's expert smokers panel.

He usually compares from two to six cigarettes, in pairs, holding them in one hand. He puffs each alternately, and deems them "rosy," "fruity," "winery," "huttery," "sultery," "gratchy," "smooth," or any of a number of other designations of taste and character.

But increasingly, what Mr. Shore is tasting comes not from real tobacco, but from what the industry calls "flavorants"—a multitude of synthetic flavor components added to make up for the taste lost in filtering out the "tar" that has been linked to cancer and other diseases.

Low-Tar Brands Stressed

The work of Mr. Shore and nine fellow panelists, unpaid volunteers from company ranks trained to recognize and consistently describe cigarette characteristics, is becoming increasingly important. New brands and variations are coming on to the market at the fastest pace in the history of the industry, signaling the most dramatic change in cigarettes since the switch to 10 filters in the 1950's and '60's.

The new bull market is in "low tar." Although the low-tar cigarette category now commands only 15 percent of the market, it has picked up 5 percent of that (worth $375 million) in the last year, and the cigarette companies are estimated to be spending nearly half their total advertising budget of $350 million to $400 million on low-tar brands this year.

"We are experiencing a dramatic change in the market," said Thomas Sandeur, vice president for advertising and brand management for Reynolds, the sales leader in the tobacco industry in the United States. "If you call the filter market of the '50's a revolution, then you call this a revolution."

Less Harm Found in Study

The cigarette industry is trying to avoid conceding that it believes that lower tar levels are less harmful because to do so would be to concede that higher levels are harmful. The tobacco companies all say that the tremendous emphasis on low-tar products is a result of "consumer demand." That demand has almost certainly been spurred by health concerns.

A recent study of mortality tables sponsored by the American Cancer Society found that smokers of low-tar cigarettes suffered less from those diseases that have been linked to cigarette smoking than those who smoked cigarettes with a higher tar content. Such studies have signaled a less harsh attitude toward smoking.

In the mid-1950's, there were only 16 brands produced by the nation's six cigarette companies. Now there are some 150, not counting the variations within brands—the kings, superkings, menthols, soft-packs, boxes, lights, kings, long lights and other mutations.

Of the brands available, 43 are in the "low tar" field—that is, one cigarette yields 15 milligrams of tar or less, the standard accepted by the Federal Trade Commission.

Moreover, tar and nicotine have been reduced substantially across the board in the last two decades. The National Cancer Institute noted this year that in 1955 the average tar yield was 43 milligrams. Now it is 18 milligrams, and dropping with each new low-tar introduction. Nicotine has been more than cut in half, from 2.8 milligrams to 1.2 milligrams in the same period.

Dr. Gio B. Gori of the institute's division of cancer cause and research, said that a rapid shift to less hazardous cigarettes could "reduce the current epidemic proportions of smoking-related diseases to minimal levels in a few decades."

All this could bode well for the tobacco industry, which has suffered badly from adverse publicity since 1964, when the first report by the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service linked cigarette smoking to cancer and other diseases. But all is far from well in the industry's view.

Definitive Evidence Lacking

"There's one aspect that is not good news," said William Kloepfer Jr., of the Tobacco Institute, a trade association with headquarters in Washington, "and that is that the medical literature has not yet demonstrated an advantage to low tar. So you have two thrusts. The tobacco industry cannot find definitive evidence that tar above a certain level is harmful, and below it is not. At the same time, they are responding to what we might call the 'scare market.'"

One industry source said privately that cigarette makers are "not unaware of the efforts to limit tar by statute or by 'tax methods'" and that the present emphasis on low tar is one hedge against the day when some form of tar limit might be imposed.

Whatever the motives, the battle has been drawn, with companies bringing out lower and lower tar brands, several in the last year. In that time, Reynolds' Vantage, the industry leader in low-tars, has been challenged by such newcomers as Merit, Kent Golden Lites, low-tar Pall Mall, Fact, and several others, including even further reductions in existing low-tar brands like True and Carlton.

With the addition of Merit, the entry from Philip Morris, the second largest company and maker of the top-selling Marlboro line, the battle took on a new front.

For the first time, a cigarette company built its advertising campaign around the fact that the taste of its cigarette was "added on," not blended in through the use of real tobaccos. Philip Morris calls it "enriched flavor" and advertises it as a "scientific breakthrough."

What Philip Morris has done with Merit is to use an old, established technique to overcome what has been one glaring fault with low-tar cigarettes—they have very little taste.

Cigarette tar is reduced not by treating the tobacco, but by tightening the filter and using porous paper and tiny airholes in the filter to mix in air. Some reductions are also made by greater use of "reconstituted leaf," which is, according to Reynolds, "stems, scraps and dust," swept up and reprocessed into a sheet.

Injection of Freon Gas

Reynolds has also created a process called "tobacco expansion," or "puffing," which involves injecting tobacco with freon gas and letting it expand, or puff up. So, less is needed (about 35 percent less in the case of Vantage), meaning there is also less tar.

To make up for the missing tar, flavoring is added to almost every cigarette manufactured, a practice going back at least to 1913 when licorice, chocolate and sugar were added to Reynolds' extraordinarily successful Camel.

But the low-tars use more flavorings, and they have become considerably more complex. Dr. Alao Rodigman, director of research for Reynolds, said that a given cigarette might have "from a dozen to about 75" flavorants, the blends of which are closely held secrets.

In the last two decades, the tobacco companies have been using sophisticated instruments to isolate and identify the components of cigarette smoke. So far, they have found about 2,300. The blenders simply buy or create synthetic chemical compounds that resemble these compounds, and these are sprayed onto the tobacco.

A monograph titled "Tobacco Flavoring for Smoking Products," published for the tobacco industry by Reynolds in 1972, lists 1,280 substances that can be used for flavoring tobaccos.

They range from 209 readily recognizable natural substances such as almond oil, camphor, corn silk, dill oil, garlic oil, myrrh oil, pine needle oil, turpentine and violet leaves to assorted organic and amino acids, alcohols, ethers, pyrones, ketones, lactones, phenols, pyrazines, dihydropyrazines, pyroles and sulfur compounds. Some have formulas like the following: 2,3,4,5,6,6a,7,8,9,10,10a,10y,2,3,4,5,6,6a,7,8,9,10,10a,10b-Dodecahydro-3,4,7,7,10a-pentamethyl-1-(H)naphthol[2,1h]pyran. This is said to impart a "cedar-cooling" taste and aroma.

Unlike food additives, which must be approved by the Food and Drug Administration, tobacco flavorants and additives are not specifically tested and regulated by the Government.

Family Doctors Given First Test To Find If Knowledge Is Up to Date

By BOYCE REINSBERGER

Some 330 family doctors bunched over examination booklets in meeting rooms at the Essex House Hotel here yesterday, scratching their heads, rubbing their eyes and marking answers in the first mandatory test ever given physicians to see whether they have kept their medical knowledge up to date.

The 330 in New York were among 1,400 around the country who took the four-hour examination that is required by the American Board of Family Practice for a family doctor to renew his "board certification."

Six years ago the newly formed board became the first medical specialty group in the United States to require its members to periodically prove that they have maintained their competence.

In every other specialty of medicine doctors need take an examination only once and may then call themselves "board certified" for the rest of their lives, even if they never again read a medical journal or attend a scientific meeting.

Good for Seven Years

The diplomas of certification offered by the American Board of Family Practice are the only ones in medicine that have expiration dates on them. They are good for seven years, but doctors must be re-examined in the sixth year for a renewal. This is the first year for renewal exams to be given.

The 21 other specialties, from anesthesiology to urology, are watching the family doctors to see whether they should adopt similar programs.

The medical profession is under increasing pressure to do something about doctors who do not keep their knowledge and skills up to date, and mandatory certification is one of the methods widely advocated.

Small Airport Put On List of Noisiest By One Complaint

SHELBYVILLE, Tenn., Oct. 29 (UPI)—Mayor H. Griffin believed it was "some kind of joke" when Shelbyville's tiny airport was ranked one of the 100 noisiest in the country.

"We haven't had commercial service in Shelbyville for nearly two years," Mr. Griffin said today. "I really thought there was an error, but if there is not, then I'd have to say that someone up there in Washington is incompetent."

A Federal Aviation Administration official in Washington confirmed that one complaint from a resident living near the airport landed it on the noisiest list.

A telegram informing the Mayor of the action was signed by Stephen G. McCahey, special assistant to the president.

"I would think you would want to know about this important action to reduce aircraft noise for those who live around our major airports," the telegram said.

Mr. McCahey referred to President Ford's recent decision to extend aircraft noise standards to all domestic and international flights in this country beginning Jan. 1. But it has been nearly two years since a full-size passenger airliner has flown into Shelbyville.

Mr. Griffin estimated 20 planes daily fly in and out of Shelbyville. He said that he knew of no complaints about noise at the airport, except those he has received recently from teasing friends.

Charles Hoch, division chief of the F.A.A., said Mr. Griffin should have received a second telegram today saying that the agency did not measure the noise level surrounding the airports.

"Several of the airports listed are not necessarily noisy," the telegram states, adding that the list is based on complaints and noise "abatement actions" of the community.

Bars Refunds to U.S. if His Medicaid Abortion Ruling Is Reversed

By MAX H. SEIGEL
A federal district judge in Brooklyn yesterday to include in his offer of Federal reimbursement for abortions a provision that, if it was overturned, the Government be allowed to retrieve the id advanced.
The Government's offer was submitted by Lewis assistant United States Attorney Government losses should be covered by the Government. Judge John Hyde amendment to the appropriations bill that be- pt. 30.
The Government's offer, barring reimbursement abortions under Medicaid, was to become effective Oct. 1, but it was not implemented because of Judge Dooling's injunction.

Judge Urges Speedy Appeal
Meanwhile, the judge urged that the Government appeal his decision as soon as possible, saying:
"It is imperative that an appeal be prosecuted with the utmost expedition so that the case can be set at rest. To have it hanging fire for a week on the decision of one district judge is not compatible with the public interest."
In rejecting the Government's arguments, Judge Dooling noted that Mr. Tesser was saying that, in the event of a reversal, "the payments will be shown to have been without warrant in law and should be refunded at the end of the litigation."

But the judge added, "The payments were not made because of a Federal injunction under a court order for a lawful service. So long as the order is unrevoked, there is not wrongdoing that could give rise retroactively to an equity or restitution."
Judge Dooling also said that his original injunction was granted on "a finding of probable ultimate success."
Order Not Yet Implemented
Judge Dooling appeared surprised and slightly annoyed yesterday when a lawyer said that the Government had not yet carried out his order of last week to send notices to all Department Health, Education and Welfare regional offices announcing that there would be Federal reimbursement for abortions under Medicaid.

A spokesman for the department conceded in a telephone interview that the notices had not been sent out. "But we consider we are complying with the court order," he said.
Keith Jones, a member of the Solicitor General's staff, said that the notices would probably be held up until all legal challenges were exhausted. He said that the next step the Government planned was to seek a stay to the Supreme Court.

Speed Modifying of Jets

By RICHARD WITKIN
The Federal Aviation Administration yesterday said that it had been notified in airline plans for modifying jetliners to protect them from effects of sudden loss of pressure.
The agency, John L. ad chided a subordinate not consulting him before a year's extension of the deadline and had served non-reviewing the subordinate's order, was not just of r DC-10's but for all jumbo jets. The Paris accident was precipitated when a rear cargo door blew out, causing the passenger cabin floor to collapse, crippling the plane's vital control cables.

The DC-10 door design has been extensively modified. But it was believed that all jumbos should be subjected to further changes to protect them against pressure loss from such causes, as a bomb or a collision. The F.A.A. order calls for strengthening cabin floors and installing large air vents to guard against any catastrophic pressure difference between cabin and cargo holds.
United Airlines also notified the agency that it was accelerating changes on its fleet of 18 Boeing 747's, so that the last eight would be modified by June 1978, six months earlier than planned.
There appeared to be a good chance that Dr. McLucas would approve some extra time beyond the December 1977 deadline for 747's and, perhaps, for Lockheed L-1011's. Neither of these planes has been involved in a decompression accident.

SAVE UP TO 50¢ A POUND ON COFFEE!

NEW! Reusable Coffee Filter Replaces Hundreds of $3 a Box Paper Filters!
Makes More Delicious, Better Tasting Coffee!

If you're the most coffee lovers, you switched to a filter-type drip coffee maker because it just plain makes better-tasting coffee. Richer and more flavorful than hot-burnt or bitter, like perked coffee. Crystal-clear, with no sediment. Great coffee! So what's the catch?
They've got you by the filters. Every time you brew coffee, you use another paper filter. Before you know it, a box of 100 paper filters has gone down the drain. And that means spending another $3 or so on a fresh box.
With our new permanent Krystal Klear Coffee Filter™, you save a bundle—for the life of your coffee maker. Because this flexible, unbreakable, safe, non-toxic plastic filter is made to outlast the coffee maker itself. And, in a relatively short time, you save more than the cost of the coffee maker on filters alone. But that's not all.
Makes More Same-Strength Cups Per Pound of Coffee! With coffee prices climbing sky-high, this new permanent filter is even better news. Because it's far more efficient in getting every last drop of flavor out of your favorite blend of coffee. Its special weave controls the flow rate, so the water never drips through the ground coffee too fast (for a weak brew and wasted coffee)—or too slow (releasing the bitter oils). You can actually get about 15% to 20% more cups of hearty coffee out of every pound! And the best part is that you get the best-tasting coffee ever! Simply empty grounds and rinse filter after each use; special soft-gauge fibers make the job easy! Every so often, hand wash with soap or detergent, and filter rinses out, white as new. Never interferes with taste of coffee—never adds stale taste (unlike reused paper filters)—and lasts years of use! KRISTAL KLEAR KOFFEE FILTER (specify cone or basket type)—ONLY $5.99!

Demand for Clues and Data Spurs Proliferation of Polls

By ROBERT REINHOLD

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29—Asked in the last debate what had caused the decline in his commanding lead over President Ford in the opinion polls, Jimmy Carter said that "the only poll I've ever followed is the one that is, you know, taken on Election Day."

That answer, the stock response of a candidate who dislikes what the polls show, were really true, then Mr. Carter wasted hundreds of thousands of dollars on polling. For this year, 30 years after the advent of scientific methods for gauging public opinion, there has been a proliferation of political polling—both "straw" soundings by the candidates to help shape campaign strategy and "public" polling by news organizations and commercial pollsters to satisfy public curiosity.

Given the extraordinary unpopularity of the Presidential race, the polls have been the focus of intense interest and scrutiny, and they have influenced the race and the press coverage in significant ways.

Ford's new thrust, in which he is campaigning against his discredited Republican predecessor and the "imperial Presidency," is a clear response to polls showing that he still suffers from a negative image because of the Watergate scandal. Similarly, Mr. Carter's final campaign travels are dictated in large measure by survey analyses of where he is strong or weak.

Gallup and Harris Aren't Predicting With just a few days left before the national election, the consensus is that Mr. Carter holds a slim and uncertain margin in the popular vote. In a joint appearance Wednesday at the National Press Club here, George Gallup and Louis Harris, the two best-known pollsters, said that Mr. Carter would probably have won the election if it had been held that day—by three or four percentage points, according to Mr. Harris and by slightly more, according to Mr. Gallup.

Both men are mindful that polling remains subject to error, and they are still conducting their final surveys, which involve unusually large samples to improve accuracy. The responses of those believed unlikely to vote will be screened out before final publication, which is Monday morning for the Gallup Poll, and Tuesday for Harris.

Until then the election remains "up for grabs," according to Mr. Harris, who said that if Mr. Carter does lose "he will have booked the largest lead in modern history."

Despite some small differences among the polls, Mr. Carter held a lead of 30 percentage points or more over Mr. Ford after the Democratic convention in July. Since then the standings have fluctuated somewhat, but the net effect is that the gap now seems so narrow that most pollsters are hedging. "There is no question this has been the wildest degree of change of any election I can remember," said Burns Roper, whose polls for the Public Broadcasting System have generally echoed the Gallup and Harris surveys.

different times using different techniques, sample sizes, questions and methods of analysis, and the margin of error inherent in any sampling. The Gallup and Harris polls were done in person while the news organizations found it cheaper and quicker to use the telephone. Such factors help explain, for example, why a Gallup Poll taken at the end of August found Mr. Carter leading by 50 percent to 37 percent, while a poll taken for Time magazine at about the same time had it 46 percent to 40 percent. Or why a New York Times-CBS poll found Mr. Carter holding a wide lead in the Midwest after the second debate, contradicting a Harris poll.

Fairly Consistent in Trend It is probably valid to compare only the general trend of the polls, and they are fairly consistent in the Presidential race. Mr. Carter held a widening lead until the Republican Convention in August, after which his lead diminished until the second debate in October, when Mr. Ford made his gaffe concerning the Soviet Union's domination of Eastern Europe. Then the Carter lead began to widen again, but only slightly. No poll of consequence has ever shown Mr. Ford in the lead nationally, although certain polls have found him tied with Mr. Carter at some points in the race.

An innovation this year has been a more sophisticated analytical use of surveys. "The thing that is really striking is that instead of concentrating on whose ahead and whose behind, we get a better impression of which issues are cutting and how different subgroups are reacting," said Jeffrey Pressman, a political scientist at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Such analysis may have had a major impact on the campaign. In the Democratic primaries, for example, the polls cast doubt on the contention of Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington that he could put together again the "grand coalition" of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Similarly, they found that the appeal of Representative Morris K. Udall was confined largely to liberals, and that Mr. Carter's appeal was very broad.

Deflated Abortion Issue More recently, surveys have deflated the abortion issue, finding that those opposing legalized abortion were no less likely to prefer Mr. Carter. And they have documented the relatively mild impact of Mr. Ford's remarks about Eastern Europe on his standing.

What is the effect on the campaigners and on the public? Spokesmen for both camps said that they monitored the special polls, but relied on their own, more specialized, surveys for strategy guidance. "From a morale standpoint it's been good. It gives us something to point to," said James Baker, head of the Ford campaign. "It's been pleasing to see it pick up."

Complaints that the polls create either a "bandwagon" or opposite, "underdog" effect among the voters have not been confirmed in studies. However, the public interpretation of who won the televised debates does seem to have been influenced by the surveys taken immediately after the debates. The results of Roper and Associated Press surveys proclaiming one man or the other the winner tended to be magnified in the days following the debate.

Moreover, by focusing on who won, some political experts felt, the polls distorted the purpose of the debates and deflected attention from substance. "The instant need to know played a terrible role," remarked Peter D. Hart, who conducts polls for candidates.

Some Score "Landing of Data" Apart from such problems, many still feel survey data are handled poorly. Albert H. Cantrell, author of "Polls: Their Use and Misuse in Politics" and head of the National Council on Public Polls, feels that the polls have "not been as imaginative as they could have been" in elucidating the real issues and underlying forces in the election. "There has been too much fixation on the horse race," he said.

Working on Film With Nudity in It Ford Group Dismisses Sound Man

By EDITH EVANS ASBURY

Sound specialist, who has been taping interviews by President Ford and other members for commercials in the Presidential campaign has been dismissed after it was discovered that he was also working on a film, "Philosophy of the Bedroom," involving nudity.

Mr. Goldbaum could not be reached for comment yesterday. His assistant, Margaret Hunnewell, said he was "in transit in an airplane somewhere."

which is supervising the Ford media efforts. Mr. Bailey also dismissed Mr. Goldbaum Thursday night "at 8 P.M., after he telephoned me and told me a story was going to break about this movie."

Other Republican candidates for whom Mr. Goldbaum did work this year, according to Mr. Angel, include Gov. Christopher S. Bond and John C. Danforth, a candidate for the Senate, in Missouri; Gov. Otis Bowen of Indiana; Senator Robert T. Stafford of Vermont; James R. Thompson, a candidate for Governor in Illinois; Marvin L. Esch, a candidate for the Senate in Michigan; and John H. Chafee, a Senate candidate in Rhode Island.

promise of substantially more Federal aid to public schools was contained in a discussion of Mr. Ford's own position on schools as a bulwark of American society and morals. Criticizing parents and pupils for what he called a erosion of discipline in the nation's schools, he said it was unfair for educators to be "hounded by a barrage of social problems."

He said, to surprisingly resounding and sustained applause from the basically liberal audience in Milwaukee, that all segments of society must work in harmony to make the schools centers of uplift and learning. "Some of today's parents say teachers must understand our children better," Mr. Ford stated. "I say it's hard for a teacher to understand a student who is threatening him or her with a knife."

He added that teachers should not be inhibited by physical or verbal abuse by students or "by the undisciplined parents of those students." In effect, he urged self-restraint both in the nation's schools and in the Federal Government's approach to them.

He renewed his proposal to consolidate 24 Government grant in-aid programs into a no-strings-attached block grant for education and, without naming his challenger, contrasted this approach with Mr. Carter's pledge to increase Federal assistance to schools.

White House official said Mr. Ford's remarks were a prelude to a likely effort, in the closing days of the election contest, to persuade voters that Mr. Carter would be beholden to urban, union and other special interest groups that supported the Georgian in expectation of new aid, in the Ford camp's view, costly Federal programs.

REAGAN SHUNS ROLE IN FORD'S CAMPAIGN

Ex-Governor Is Able to Withhold Full Support for G.O.P. Rival—Backs Conservative Cause

By WALLACE THIRNER

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 29—Former Gov. Ronald Reagan has succeeded in running out the election campaign without being drawn into direct, full support of President Ford, to whom he lost the Republican Presidential nomination after a hard fight.

In the campaign's final week, Mr. Reagan toured the Mountain States, speaking for conservative Republican candidates for the United States House and Senate, praising the Republican platform and calling Jimmy Carter, the Democratic Presidential nominee, the "tooth fairy" who "rides high in the straddle."

Mr. Reagan's mentionings of Mr. Ford were vague and lacked the precise, unequivocal endorsing phrases that the former Governor gave to such candidates as Orrin Hatch, running for the Senate in Utah, and Representative Steven D. Symms of Idaho, who is seeking his third term in the House.

Last night, before 1,300 persons in Boise, Idaho, Mr. Reagan mentioned the President's name just twice. First, he defended Mr. Ford's "bad choice of words in the second debate," contending that the President had "meant to speak about the independent spirit of the people of Eastern Europe."

Then Mr. Reagan said: "It's necessary that we send Gerald Ford to the White House again. We have to stem the tide, put our finger in the dike, because we are outnumbered by the Democratic majority in Congress." He used the same analogy in his Utah appearances.

Apathetic Response to Ford Aide The Boise crowd's reaction was apathetic when David Leroy, the Ford campaign manager, was introduced. Despite the surface indications of Republican division, political observers expect the Ford-Dole ticket to carry Idaho easily.

Mr. Reagan's purpose in visiting Utah was said to be to give support to Mr. Hatch in his senatorial campaign against Frank E. Moss, the Democratic incumbent.

Last Sunday, when President Ford campaigned in California, such close Reagan supporters as John Wayne, the actor, appeared with Mr. Ford.

But Mr. Reagan spent the day at his ranch in Santa Barbara and the Ford staff released a telegram expressing the former Governor's regrets that he could not be present.

A Republican insider familiar with the maneuvering to attempt to bring the two men together said that Mr. Reagan had refused since the Republican National Convention last August to get closely involved with the Ford campaign.

"He agreed that he'd support Ford," the source said. "He said he would support the party and the platform. Then he said, 'I'm too busy to go everywhere for everybody.'"

Democrats Accuse G.O.P. of Violating In Congress

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29—Democratic National Committee members accused the Federal Election Commission of violating the Federal Election Campaign Act in its distribution of money to Congressional candidates.

The Democrats said that the commission had approved the distribution of money to candidates in such a way that it would exceed the contribution limits to national candidates.

Benton Becker, a lawyer for the Democratic National Committee, called the commission's action "blatantly political" and "blatantly unconstitutional."

The D.N.C. is concerned by apparently a coordinated and successful effort to pour money into the Republican House and Senate campaigns, called the "chameleon" and "blatantly political" commission had approved the distribution of money to candidates in such a way that it would exceed the contribution limits to national candidates.

Under the law, the Democratic National Committee can raise $10,810 in support of each national candidate. Multi-candidate committees, such as the Republican Congressional Committee, can raise more.

The Democrats object to the commission's action, after giving it $5,000 additional Congressional support.

The Democrats also said the commission's action violated the law. The commission's action, they said, was "blatantly unconstitutional."

Puerto Rican Election in Doubt As Independent Voters Increase

SAN JUAN, P.R., Oct. 29—Puerto Ricans, for years accustomed to the rising economic expectations created by Operation Bootstrap, will decide Tuesday whether Gov. Rafael Hernandez Colon's administration, which has seen a period of high unemployment and economic recession, is to earn a second four-year term.

The ruling Populist Democratic party, which fashioned the modern Puerto Rico by adopting the commonwealth status and promoting economic development, has lost only one election in the last 36 years. That resulted from a split in the party in 1968.

Traditionally, islanders have voted along rigid party lines. But the number of independent voters and of split ballots has tended to grow since 1968, and this is expected again this year. Opinion polls also indicated that in the final month of the four-year gubernatorial campaign, as much as 20 percent of the electorate was undecided. This is highly unusual for Puerto Rico and makes many observers hesitant to predict the outcome.

The Governor's chief opponent is San Juan Mayor Carlos Romero Barcelo of the New Progressive Party, which favors independence. Two other candidates favor independence. They are Ruben Berrios Martinez of the Puerto Rican Independence Party, which has a Social-Democratic platform, and Juan Mari Brás of the Puerto Rican Socialist Party, a Marxist-Leninist group.

The Socialist Party, who previously denounced the gubernatorial election as a "colonial farce," will be taking part in them for the first time.

Although some analysts think that Mr. Carter retains a very narrow lead, his situation has deteriorated since the state's most recent polls to be a toss-up. Teeter's survey for Mr. Ford last week showed the state even; Patrick for Mr. Carter this week at President ahead by 1 percent.

It will, all depend on the results of the state's election on Tuesday. Democratic believe labor will come through to part because the job of James as the key man in the state election may be at stake.

Sheriff Eugene L. Coon, the County (Pittsburgh) Democrat, said, "You can see the in the washrooms and on the boards in the mills; and that they're serious."

But there are some signs. I. W. Abel, president of the U. M. W. union, said that neither candidate "will votes to spare." Asked whether he would vote for Mr. Carter, he said, "No, my people are not excited even think the candidates are excited."

A measure of the Carter difficulty here and the close race to result more from negative the Georgian than from a surge in President Ford can be seen in the new registration figures. Over 750,000, the largest ed history of the state, which still put the Keystone State beyond of the President.

What Has Hurt Carter Mr. Carter's interview with magazine and his perceived fur the issues have hurt him in part of the state, a normally area where he showed surprise in the primary and the early in the general election campaign, running less strongly than in the southwestern Pennsylvania, around Pittsburgh, party became suddenly surging senatorial candidate Representative H. Drew Lewis, Mr. Ford's state said that if the President did Pennsylvania, "he doesn't have to win the election." Mr. Ford or six of the eight big battle ground to pull off an upset, and Michigan, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Texas now appear to be the managers believe.

The Ford campaign has heavily on stumping by the candidates television advertising in the full Pennsylvania. With only budgeted for execution on order here, according to Martin H. executive director of the campaign most one-third of that sum was to direct-mail advertising.

Like his Democratic counterpart, Hamburger was extremely reluctant victory outright. By Tuesday he expects Mr. Ford to but he added that he could not say a campaign "when so few people any real sense of how it stands."

For example, during the first 18 days of October, the Republican ticket reported spending less than $235,000 for air travel while the Democratic ticket spent about $655,000.

Sarbanes Is Given Edge in Bid to Unseat Senator Beall in Maryland

By DAVID E. ROSENBAUM... BETHESDA, Md., Oct. 28—The Senate race in Maryland this year provides a national political climate that has changed in recent years.

Six years ago, J. Glenn Beall Jr. received more help from the Nixon White House, financially and tactically, than any other candidate for the Senate. In addition, in 1970, the Democratic Party was sharply split in Maryland, as it was nationwide, between the party regulars oriented toward political machines and toward organized labor and the liberal, anti-Vietnam War reformers.

Mr. Beall has gained ground since then. The teor of the campaign also reflects the national scene. Mr. Sarbanes has generally taken liberal Democratic positions on economic and social policy questions; Mr. Beall, in this term in the Senate, has generally supported Republican Presidents on those matters.

Beall Family Prominent in State

Mr. Beall, who is 49 years old, comes from one of Maryland's oldest political families, and he tells his audiences how his ancestors arrived in the state before the Revolutionary War. His father served 10 years in the House of Representatives and 12 years in the Senate, and Mr. Beall was in the House for a term before his election to the Senate.

His father served 10 years in the House of Representatives and 12 years in the Senate, and Mr. Beall was in the House for a term before his election to the Senate.

He paid $50,000 in so-called "walking-around" money in political clubs before the primary election and plans to pay more before the general election Tuesday. He stands to carry the city with a large majority.

Wallace of Alabama, he says, "has joined the pointy-headed bureaucrats"—but he reserves his special opprobrium for Mr. Carter. Mr. Maddox and the Democratic Presidential nominee are old enemies. Mr. Maddox ran well ahead of Mr. Carter in the gubernatorial primary in 1966, he won the nomination in a runoff and finally the governorship in a three-way race that had to be decided by the Georgia House of Representatives. Then, in 1970, unable to succeed himself by law, he ran for Lieutenant Governor and was elected despite the opposition of Mr. Carter, who was elected Governor. Mr. Maddox spent his four years in office attacking Mr. Carter, and has not let up since. While Mr. Maddox says he does not like President Ford, either, he adds that he far prefers Mr. Ford to Mr. Carter, although he contends that both are "soft on communism and weak on Americanism."

Mr. Beall has gained ground since then. The teor of the campaign also reflects the national scene. Mr. Sarbanes has generally taken liberal Democratic positions on economic and social policy questions; Mr. Beall, in this term in the Senate, has generally supported Republican Presidents on those matters. But the campaign has turned more on the personal style and party affiliation of the candidates than on their ideology.

METZENBAUM PRESSES TAFT IN SENATE RACE

Metzenbaum, Rated a Toss-up, Presents Voters With a Choice Between Two Philosophies

By WILLIAM K. STEVENS
Special to The New York Times

CLEVELAND, Oct. 29—Here in Ohio, the campaign for the United States Senate presents a clash of good old-fashioned conservatism vs. Republican politics in very much their purest partisan form.

Metzenbaum is expected to be quite close to Taft Jr. in the race for the Senate seat between Republican Senator Robert Taft Jr. and former Democratic Senator Howard M. Metzenbaum rates a toss-up.

Senator Robert Taft Jr.

Howard M. Metzenbaum

to answer the question which of the parties' traditional philosophies is best suited to the late 1970's and early 1980's.

The campaign has been uncluttered by questions of personality, by doubt about candidates' "real" beliefs and character, by scandals or other distractions. It has allowed the contenders to focus entirely on classic questions of economics, social welfare, government intervention in society and national defense.

The candidates, furthermore, offer remarkably faithful expressions of the traditional philosophies of their national parties about such issues.

Offer Faithful Philosophies

The very name of Taft has long been interchangeable with the word "Republican." Mr. Taft's father, a Senator before him, was the leader of the party's conservative wing in the 1940's and early 1950's. His grandfather was a Republican President. Mr. Taft follows staunchly in the family tradition of conservative (but not extreme or reactionary) Republicanism. He is strongly supported by business interests, a fact that his opponent does not think from pointing out.

Metzenbaum is the only thing about Mr. Metzenbaum that is at odds with the image of the quintessential Northern Democrat is that he is a business man and a wealthy one. Otherwise, his beliefs are intact, and big labor is working energetically for him. When he came into the campaign well over 50 years old from Taft's Cincinnati, Mr. Metzenbaum from the Cleveland suburb of Shaker Square. They ran against each other for the first time in 1970. Senator Metzenbaum narrowly edged Mr. Metzenbaum, winning 49 percent of the vote.

Metzenbaum was appointed to the Senate in 1974. He subsequently ran that year for election to a full term but lost to Mr. Metzenbaum, who was severely wounded then, in the year of Watergate. Metzenbaum disclosed that he had paid no income tax because of business deductions.

This year there have been no such comparisons. Mr. Metzenbaum has run a campaign, focusing on the issues, in the campaign he jumped on a "shell game" by changing positions on the Humphrey-Hawkins jobs bill and the Kennedy-Corman bill to establish a national health insurance program. Mr. Metzenbaum replied that he still supports the goals of both bills but believes the former to be inflationary in its latest form and the latter to be fiscally unsound in its latest version.

Three Indiana Democrats in Fights To Keep House Seats Won in 1974

By SETH S. KING
Special to The New York Times

EVANSTON, Ind.—Two years ago, in the very backwash over Watergate, three Democrats ripped up the form book and changed Indiana Congressional seats that had been safely Republican for decades, to Democratic hands. In a normal year, would have been considered a certainty in the Evansville District, which the Republicans held since 1966.

Watergate upset victories gave the Democrats, for one of the few times in this century, a dominating 9-to-2 margin in Indiana's House delegation. They also raised the question—here and elsewhere in the country, where there were similar upsets—whether all this was simply a Watergate aberration that would not be repeated.

man Congressmen are running with every resource in the incumbency they can muster to alter the historic patterns a second time.

The fourth Democrat, Representative Philip H. Hayes of Evansville, is now on the sidelines after coming within a nose of upsetting Senator Vance Hartke, the three-term incumbent in the Democratic primary last spring.

One of the three trying again this year, Representative Philip R. Sharp, was believed to be holding a respectable lead over William Frazier, the Republican, in the 10th District, the light-industry and farming area of east central Indiana.

Two Face Hard Going

But the two others were swimming against stronger traditional tides, facing challenges from opponents who fit well in the past Republican molds.

Two years ago, here in the sprawling Second District, which takes in most of northwestern Indiana, Representative Floyd J. Fithian, a Purdue University history professor and part-time farmer, became the first Democrat to win in 42 years.

If Mr. Fithian could retain the razor-thin lead he now appears to have over Will Erwin, a 51-year-old full-time farmer from Bourbon who is a former Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, he would be the first Democrat in history to win two terms in this district.

Mr. Fithian would agree with Republican complaints that he, Mr. Sharp and Representative David W. Evans, the third Democrat, began running for reelection the day they got to Washington educated, or the sick and aged attended to, are people fed and cared for as well as and as unselfishly as in this great land of ours."

The statement, Mr. Metzenbaum said, was "the crux of the difference" between the candidates. In his speeches, Mr. Metzenbaum declares that "there's something wrong when eight million people are unemployed, prices spiral out of sight, utility rates and health-care costs go up, and the consumer is the forgotten man and woman."

He calls for cutting the defense budget, by eliminating waste, and for direct government participation when private industry can't reduce unemployment effectively. He emphasizes consumer interests against those of business.

Last week, a Democratic poll by Patrick Caddell showed Mr. Metzenbaum with 46 percent of the vote and Senator Taft with 45 percent. A Republican poll by Robert Teeter also showed a one-point margin in Mr. Taft's favor.

Until then Mr. Taft had focused on the need for a strong national defense, playing heavily to ethnic voters. He called for tax reduction for middle-income people and for better control of health-care costs. He emphasized his role in writing the jobs bill and in bringing new jobs to Ohio. He jabbed at what he called Mr. Metzenbaum's lack of credibility on economic issues, and at his proposals to cut defense spending.

But this week he went on the attack, accusing Mr. Metzenbaum of playing a "shell game" by changing positions on the Humphrey-Hawkins jobs bill and the Kennedy-Corman bill to establish a national health insurance program. Mr. Metzenbaum replied that he still supports the goals of both bills but believes the former to be inflationary in its latest form and the latter to be fiscally unsound in its latest version.

Buckley, in Tour of State by Plane, Meets Sparse Crowds at Airports

By GLENN FOWLER
Special to The New York Times

BINGHAMTON, N.Y., Oct. 29—Senator James L. Buckley, in a final pre-election barnstorming swing across New York State today, gave pep talks to sparse but enthusiastic groups of supporters at seven airport rallies from Suffolk County to Buffalo.

His audiences ranged from a half-dozen placard-carrying backers who appeared shortly after sunrise at Islip's MacArthur Airport on Long Island to 60 or so, plus a few coat-tail-seeking local candidates who greeted him early in the afternoon at Rochester. Mr. Buckley also dropped into White Plains, Albany, Syracuse and Binghamton, as well as Buffalo.

Local Republican and Conservative leaders could not blame the weather for today's small airport crowds. The skies were clear or only partly cloudy, and the air was chilly but not cold.

At each stop the Conservative-Republican incumbent repeated his challenge to Daniel P. Moynihan to debate him face to face. However, when questioned by a newsman, Mr. Buckley disclosed that a television debate between the candidates had been scheduled for Sunday afternoon on NBC.

He Banks on Upstate Vote

Senator Buckley repeatedly pictured himself to his listeners as an underdog who was rapidly closing in on his opponent and who would win narrowly next Tuesday. He conceded an edge to Mr. Moynihan only in New York City, saying suburban and upstate voters would be in the Buckley column.

Replying to an allegation by Mr. Moynihan that the Senator's voting record on issues affecting New York State was "consistently unaring, consistently arrogant," Mr. Buckley said: "I think the people of the state know that I care, that I am thorough in dealing with issues and that I think before I act."

He characterized his opponent, whom he invariably referred to as "Professor" Moynihan, as a dilettante incapable of dealing with the realities of government.

"I don't know what the professor teaches at Harvard," he said from the steps of an airport lounge in Rochester, "but if it's economics, he ought to be reported to Ralph Nader as a consumer fraud." At another point, he ridiculed Mr. Moynihan's often stilted oratory as masking a high attitude—one that "may go well enough with undergraduates but won't do at all on the floor of the United States Senate."

Tax Increases Forecast

Mr. Buckley stuck today to his main theme that a Moynihan victory would threaten increased taxes for New York families if social programs advocated by the Democratic-Liberal candidate were enacted. But he broadened his remarks occasionally to express concern for more effective control of crime and support for public-works legislation yielding immediate jobs.

Accompanying Senator Buckley on his chartered turboprop plane were the heads of several ethnic groups—Polish-American, German-American, Italian-American and Spanish-American.

Mrs. Buckley also made the trip, her first airplane cross-country effort with her husband.

"Give me the railroad any time," she said this afternoon, recalling fondly the whistle-stop trips she and the Buckley children had made with the Senator earlier in the campaign.

Later in the day Senator Buckley returned to New York City for walking tours along Main Street and Roosevelt Avenue in Flushing, Queens, and at Broadway and 207th Street in the Inwood section of Manhattan. He received friendly receptions and was mobbed by well wishers at the Inwood stop.

KEY CAMPAIGN ISSUE IS CITED BY MOYNIHAN

He Asserts That He and Buckley Are 'Fundamentally Different' on What U.S. Should Do for New York

By THOMAS F. RONAN
Special to The New York Times

BUFFALO, Oct. 29—Daniel P. Moynihan asserted today that the main issue that had developed in his contest with Senator James L. Buckley was their "fundamentally different" approach to what the Federal Government could and should do to help New York in its time of troubles.

"Mr. Buckley, as his record for the last six years all too dimly shows, believes that the Federal Government neither can nor should do anything to help New York," the Democratic-Liberal candidate said at a luncheon of the City Club of New York before he flew here for meetings with politicians and for news conferences.

Mr. Moynihan said the political philosophy of the Conservative-Republican, which he again characterized as extremist, put Mr. Buckley outside the mainstream of bipartisan support we have achieved in this country for the idea that the Federal Government is there to help when help is needed and should be used to provide such help.

Mr. Moynihan declared that he and Senator Jacob K. Javits, whom he described as a mainstream Republican, shared "in that bipartisan consensus" and rejected Mr. Buckley's "extremist conception of the role of our national government." Mr. Javits is not supporting Mr. Buckley in the Senate race.

Hostility Charged

"Representation of the kind Mr. Buckley just gives New York in the past six years does not deserve the name of representation," Mr. Moynihan continued. "It is worse than no representation at all. For Buckley's political philosophy, in its hostility to the Federal Government, deprives us of a fighting chance to get our fair share of Federal expenditures."

Mr. Buckley, on an upstate tour, passed through the airport here shortly before Mr. Moynihan arrived. He told newsmen he intended to "grab" his opponent and ask him how he intended to finance the $152 billion Federal programs that the Senator said he was espousing. Mr. Buckley said the programs would mean higher taxes.

When this challenge was put to Mr. Moynihan, he again attacked the Buckley record and said Mr. Buckley was telling fairy tales about him. He said that the Senator had voted for more taxes and fewer jobs and that his record was so bad he was conceding it.

With a tight schedule, Mr. Moynihan moved from news conferences to five receptions and a dinner for local Democratic candidates for the State Senate, the Assembly and court posts.

The schedule had been arranged by Joseph F. Crangle, the Erie County Democratic chairman and a key supporter of Mr. Moynihan's. Mr. Crangle has one of the most active political organizations in the state and prides himself on having out large Democratic majorities. He had apparently decided not to relax, even though a recent poll indicated that Mr. Moynihan had a substantial lead over Mr. Buckley in Buffalo and a slight edge in the county as a whole.

Mr. Moynihan's fast-moving evening tour covered a cross section of the Democratic Party here, and he was greeted cordially at all his stops. At one of them he was joined by Lieut. Gov. Mary Anne Krupsak, Mr. Crangle and Margaret Costanza, co-chairman of the Carter-Mondale campaign in the state.

In Westchester, Buckley and Moynihan Pay Possibly Last Call

By JAMES FERON
Special to The New York Times

WHITE PLAINS, Oct. 29—Senator James L. Buckley has campaigned in Westchester County on more than a dozen occasions in the past few months.

"I think I've been here at least once a week," he said this morning. It is not the sort of thing that a Republican-Conservative candidate for the Senate had to do in the past, but times have changed. This once-Republican stronghold is becoming a county that could go either way, and it might this year.

Both Mr. Buckley and his Democratic rival, Daniel P. Moynihan, made what is likely to be their final appearances here today. The crowds were sparse, hardly representative of the fierce contests their supporters have been waging.

"I think we've pulled even with the Senator in Westchester," a Moynihan aide said, watching his candidate file questions from some of the 75 elderly men and women at a political meeting in the White Plains County Center.

"He's been here only a few times," the aide, Peter Chalkin said. "It's been tough, very tough, to get him into Westchester." Mr. Moynihan, who is believed to be leading in the statewide contest, spent 45 minutes at the meeting and then dashed back to Manhattan.

Senator Buckley, who was greeted by a dozen supporters at the County Airport during a 45-minute stopover, is believed by his supporters to hold a 10-percentage-point lead in Westchester.

"The Senator has to maintain that kind of margin in the suburban counties to win the election," one of his aides said.

George H. C. Lawrence, who is the Senator's county coordinator, said: "We've attracted many volunteers and, in fact, have been supplying them for the Ford campaign and the Republican-Conservative telephone banks."

The reverse is true for the thinner Moynihan forces which have had to "ride piggyback" to some extent, on the other Democratic races," according to James A. Carr, a vice chairman of the county Democratic committee and Yonkers ward leader who is assisting Mr. Chalkin, the Moynihan coordinator.

The two men were standing together at the rate of the sparsely filed list in the County Center as Mr. Moynihan, flanked by local candidates on the stage, waited for the completion of a presentation by David W. Hicks, a Briarcliff college lecturer who is waging an uphill struggle as a Republican-Conservative in his first race to oust the Democratic incumbent, Representative Richard L. Ottinger.

In a morning of quickly changing scenes, Mr. Ottinger, who began speaking before Mr. Hicks arrived, had already left, as had Barbara Keating, the former Conservative candidate for the Senate. She spoke on behalf of the absent Senator Buckley. Other candidates had departed and still others were arriving.

"Ask Mr. Moynihan when he comes," Mrs. Keating had said, "about some of the statements he's made in this campaign." She quoted what she indicated were slighting remarks made by Mr. Moynihan about the aged and the starving.

When the time came, he was asked, instead, what he would do about "organized labor's squeezing us out," a reference to inflation, and how to solve crime in the streets. Mr. Moynihan's answer was roughly the same for both questions: Reject Senator Buckley because his "extreme" opposition to all Federal programs makes it impossible for Washington to observe costs such as those for welfare, which he cited as an example.

"Al DeBello tells me that 61 percent of your county budget goes for welfare," Mr. Moynihan said, referring to County Executive Alfred B. DeBello. He said that if the Federal Government absorbed the cost of legitimately national problems such as welfare, local taxes would drop or could be used in other areas such as crime prevention.

The Buckley contingent had provided a response to that statement earlier at the airport as a Republican aide standing behind the Senator held aloft a giant check for $3,000 made out to Mr. Moynihan. It represented what Mr. Buckley said his Democratic rival's policies would cost each Westchester family each year.

In Nassau, Senator Has Chipped Away at Lead Held by Democrat

By GEORGE VECSEY
Special to The New York Times

HEMPSTEAD, L.I., Oct. 29—Earlier this year, supporters of Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington captured 10 out of 11 Democratic Presidential delegates within the Town of Hempstead, and 17 of 22 delegates in Nassau County. Their efforts did not get their candidate a spot on the ticket, but many of the same workers are now pushing Daniel P. Moynihan's campaign to unseat Senator James L. Buckley.

Until a few weeks ago, Mr. Moynihan had a large lead in this county, but Mr. Buckley has apparently chipped away at it. Still, an official of the Moynihan campaign in Nassau, Samuel Lubin, said, "His lead is between zero and 8 percent."

Supporters believe that if Mr. Moynihan can come close to Mr. Buckley in Nassau County, with its 3-to-2 Republican majority in registration, then his presumed urban plurality will propel him to victory.

The Republicans, on the other hand, see Mr. Buckley "closing quite well," according to one supporter, because of his appeal to conservative home-owning white voters.

Areas of Support

While these suburbanites tend to vote Republican, there are unique characteristics to the Moynihan-Buckley race. Mr. Moynihan has gained attention by his aggressive posture as the United States representative to the United Nations, and he seems to be tapping moderate support and the large Jewish vote.

Among the 800,000 residents of the Town of Hempstead, Mr. Buckley is favored in predominantly Irish-Catholic areas like Levittown and upper-middle-class sections like Rockville Centre and Garden City. But here in the Village of Hempstead, there seemed to be no pattern among the biracial mixture of elderly, young and business people who were waiting in the post office one morning this week.

The Jewish vote represents perhaps a third of the registered voters in Nassau, and even the Buckley headquarters assumes there will be a heavy Democratic vote in such Jewish sections as Great Neck and Roseton on the North Shore.

But Senator Jackson had attracted supporters in other sections of Nassau and his advocacy of strong defense and industrial projects and his support for Israel. Many Jackson backers are working for Mr. Moynihan, including Mr. Lubin and Ellen Conovitz on the North Shore, and Ray Simon and Barbara Honig on the South Shore. Mrs. Honig won a major title for Senator Jackson in keeping Mr. Carter in the primary but lost in two Congressional Districts last spring.

'Broader Base'

But the Jackson supporters insist, as Mrs. Conovitz puts it, that "there is a much broader base here than just the Jackson group."

"We couldn't have done this campaign with just the Jackson group," she said. The Buckley people expect the Senator to win Nassau County, as he did in 1970, when he ran only as a Conservative and garnered 45.6 percent of the county vote, far above that of his Democratic and Republican opponents. His winning statewide total was only 38.8 percent.

Some Republican officials think Mr. Buckley may be helped by the lack of enthusiasm for Mr. Carter. One leading Republican calls a private poll of the Presidential race "self-destructive figures" for Mr. Carter.

Most of these opinions are gathered from political workers. Except when specifically asked how they feel about the election, few citizens seem to generate much conversation.

The campaigns have not touched many voters because of financial restrictions, a complaint familiar to all parts of the country. There are few signs or buttons evident anywhere. The Buckley headquarters is a tasteful office opposite expensive shops in Garden City; the Moynihan offices are more modest shops in Great Neck and Westbury.

The Buckley budget is $132,000 for Nassau alone, while the Moynihan budget is around $35,000, according to officials from both campaigns. Much of Mr. Buckley's money has been spent distributing his book, "If Man Were Angels."

High Court Reje Appeal by McCarr To Remain on Ba

By LESLEY OELSNER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29—The States Supreme Court today, unan rejected Eugene J. McCarr's bid back to place on the New York ballot as an independent candidate President in next Tuesday's election.

The court's action—announced before 3 P.M., less than five hours Mr. McCarr filed his plea—court—appears to bolster Jimmy Carter's chances in the race for New York electoral votes.

The New York State Board of E immediately began telephoning officials across the state to notify of the court's action.

By 4 P.M., according to the offi ager at the board's headquarters in Iy, Evelyn Lane, all the local bo been called. They were told to b both Mr. McCarr's name and th of Terence J. Spencer, an inde candidate for Vice President wh didacy was also involved in th the High Court today.

One-Day Stay Was Given. The New York Court of Appe state's highest court, ruled on We that Mr. McCarr's name must moved from the ballot because not complied with state require garding the form in which no petitions are to be submitted.

Yesterday, Chief Judge Charle tel of the New York Court, issue day stay, delaying the enforce ment appeals court's ruling in-orde Mr. McCarr's time to take his the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. McCarr filed an applicat morning with Justice Thurgood N the Justice who receives emerge quets and motions from New Yo necticut and Vermont, asking for: tional stay.

He asked for a "reasonable p time." In order, he said, to ena to file a formal request asking th to review the New York cour. As a practical matter, a stay wh had the effect of deciding the because Election Day would occu the Court could review and de case.

The Justices were meeting to their regular private Friday co in which they review pending and requests for review of low rulings. Justice Marshall thus refe McCarr's request to his collea; the full court decided the matc one-sentence unsigned annou saying simply "that the requ denied."

Mr. McCarr is currently on th in 29 states. Across the counr, didacy has taken on a negatv stance, with Democratic leader; that it will draw more votes w the potential Carter support. th President Ford's.

In states such as New York, wh show Mr. Carter and Mr. Ford to race, Democratic leaders have thaf Mr. McCarr's candidacy co tip the vote to Mr. Ford.

The New York State Democrati ve Committee thus sought to k McCarr off the ballot. As part effort, Democratic Party membe a challenge with the State Boar; tions last September to the M nominating petitions.

This challenge led to the litig which the New York Court of 7 and the United States Supreme acted.

WHERE AMERICA GETS THINGS DONE

NBC Network news correspondent David Rush reporting from the 1976 Democratic National Convention at Madison Square Garden in New York

New York. The communications capital of the nation.

Where each day a flood of worldwide news reports are gathered, picked over, tested and prepared for dissemination to all America. And where the three major broadcasting networks and three out of four of the top two dozen national magazines are headquartered.

Nowhere do fairness and accuracy in reporting count more than in New York. Because what is said here today is repeated tomorrow all across the nation.

New York is also the home of The New York Times. Its influence is felt throughout the nation. Even around the world. Among the news media, too. As Theodore H. White reported about The Times in his "The Making of the President—1972":

"It was the first paper read in any newspaper office or any television station anywhere in America, after the editor or producer had read the local papers."

New Custody Customs: In the 'Best Interests' of the Child

attles over custody of children are new. But in cases decided last year, courts have awarded to a stepfather over the objector mother, who was not confidant; to grandparents, although the mother nor father was confidant; and, in a case of illegitimacy, to their father.

Instance, the court asserted that was predicated upon the "best interests" of the child or child-

York recently, the state's court indicated that under circumstances a mother's ineligibility to custody could be by foster parents.

As like these reflect not only of the traditional presumption of mothers in custody involving young children, but "not by courts—acting in re-social change and new parenthood—to decide, with alacrity and sophistication than precisely what the "best of a child are.

When, as widely reported, more fathers are asserting claims, what sort of criteria using to determine the "best of a child when neither parent and each seeks custody?" matter, when the contest foster parents or relatives logical parents?

do lawyers go about metacriteria which can involve such intangibles as "love, affection and emotional ties?"

Questions are being raised and mainly in terms of parents custody in the courts through who argue the disputants' what is in the best interests of. But there is a growing tendency to believe that the child should have independent legal representation. Some experts in custody are advocating adoption of a child's bill of rights that would embody such protection. (Along these lines, the Supreme Court agreed on Oct. 12 to rule whether children living with foster parents might be taken from them without a hearing.)

Harry M. Faio, a lawyer to Beverly Hills, Calif., who served for nearly a decade as the chairman of the custody committee of the American Bar Association and is a former chairman of its family law section, traces the decline of the presumption in favor of mothers of children of tender years to a change in society itself.

"The law seems to follow the basic attitudes of society," he said. "In years past, when the mother more often than not was primarily a homemaker, serving as a wife and mother in the more traditional sense, it was understandable that she should be the caretaker."

"Now that women are working as much as men, wanting to equalize status and having a different identity from that of 25 years ago, the attitude seems to be that parenting is not necessarily a sex-oriented function, especially beyond the years of early personal development."

In general, he indicated, courts still shy away from depriving mothers of custody in the absence of good cause through the pre-school years.

"The real issues arise when the child is a little older and expressing attachments and feelings toward the father," Mr. Faio said.

Custody disputes arising at or after this time, he indicated, have figured in many jurisdictions in the evolution of guidelines for the determination of eventual custody.

"Michigan, in my opinion, has the best set of criteria so far," said Dr.

Doris Jones Freed, chairman of the committee on divorce law and procedures of the family law section of the American Bar Association. Dr. Freed, a practitioner in matrimonial law and an author, points out that, among other things, the Michigan guidelines give the real, or psychological, parent, "a fair shake" against a biological parent in a contest between the two.

"Add a child who has been in a foster home for many years and developed an attachment is given a fair shake when it comes to that so-called cliché: blood is thicker than water," Dr. Freed said.

This is a point of view that has been propounded in the influential book, "Beyond the Best Interests of the Child," by Joseph Goldstein, Anna Freud and Albert J. Solnit.

The Michigan statute says the court, in determining the best interests of a child, must take into account all of the state's guidelines.

These include: The love, affection and other emotional ties existing between the competing parties and the child. The capacity and disposition of the competing parties to give the child love, affection and guidance and to continuity. The permanence, as a family unit, of the existing or proposed custodial home. The moral fitness of the competing parties. The home, school and community record of the child, if the court deems the child to be of sufficient age to express a preference. Any other relevant factors.

Dr. Freed, a doctor of juridical science, said that these criteria were probably the most detailed to be found in any American custody statute and reflect an approach to "best interests" in terms of the psychological welfare of the child. It was noted that the criteria were expressed as guidelines, not as absolutes, and that their application would focus attention on the relationship of the child to the proposed guardian.

The sort of thinking embodied in the Michigan statute is apparent in the recent decisions that awarded custody to such people as a stepfather, a father of illegitimate twins and to grandparents.

In dealing with the right of a court to award custody of a 12-year-old girl to a stepfather, a New Jersey court noted that other states' courts had been divided on the question.

The court noted that in the past it had awarded custody of a child to someone other than the biological parent only after finding that the biological parent was unfit or that the child had been abandoned—factors not present in the case under consideration.

It said that among the factors it weighed before making its determination were the importance of maintaining a family unit that consisted in part of two younger children; a comparison of the work record, stability and home of the stepfather with the mother's; the girl's residence with the stepfather for two years prior to the custody contest and the desire of the girl and the other two children to remain with the stepfather.

The custody dispute involving the father of illegitimate twins arose in Illinois, whose constitution forbids denial of equal protection by the law on the basis of sex. In awarding custody to the father the court took into account stability of environment, material advantages, parental health and past actions by the parents affecting their fitness for custody.

The case that resulted in the award of custody of an 8-year-old boy to his grandparents arose in Ohio. The boy had lived with them since birth, and the operative rule in the case was one that permitted a court to award custody to a relative if the court concluded that an award to either parent would not be in the child's best interests.

In discussing the way lawyers proceed in cases that confront courts with the question of who gets custody when neither parent is unfit, Mr. Faio said, he makes use of a variety of tools. Psychological testing and psychiatric evaluation are used in an effort to establish the respective strengths and weaknesses of parents and to determine with which of the parents a child identifies more strongly.

Besides seeking evidence on what he calls the available and potential psychological, physiological and intellectual strengths of the parents, Mr. Faio said he looked into the responsibilities of each parent that demand their time; and what auxiliary help—such as nursemaids, housekeeper, or relatives—might be available to a custodial parent.

Frequently, he noted, courts appoint social workers to interview teachers, neighbors, clergymen and others who may be familiar with the children. The idea, he indicated, is to furnish a judge with as much objective data as possible. "One thing about custody or about family law generally that I think stamps it as unique," he said, "is that courts are given almost unlimited discretion."

And, he added, "The exercise of the discretion by a judge is far less a product of his learning than of his personality and his temperament, his background and his interests, and his biases and prejudices, conscious and unconscious."

"In the last analysis," Mr. Faio said, "the judge who sits in judgment of these matters exercises his personal discretion. All he learns in law school is he should give children to either parent according to their best interest."

"Until you get the facts, until you get the personality and background, you really don't know the answer, despite the Michigan statute."

Knotty, Sculptural Forms of Grace and Motion

LISA HAMMEL

As like a gigantic creature planet descends men in the length of the white and spreads its braided web across the polished wood-hine pours through the dows, and the rows of red boxes on the sill are after all going to be eaten the hors d'oeuvre before sized construction, whimsical inchworm and looking and floppiness—rather like a scintillating Afghan, furnishes the 1 of a SoHo loft. Thus is led to the work and living noise Grossen, the fiber one, who at 33 has achieved fame as the artist. But, having said that, one must immediately forget all the hand-knotted hammocks and hanging plant holders one has ever seen. She is a macramé artist by definition because her remarkably varied work is executed with only two techniques: braiding and the half-hitch knot.

Nicolas Rodriguez of the Hadler Galleries, where she is currently having a show that will end today, noted recently: "She has gone beyond macramé into creating new forms that are purely sculptural."

Although she has done small pieces, Miss Grossen is probably best known for works of impressive size. The abstract forms, richly textured and often the colors of sunrise or twilight, fill space with discomforting tension, or flow in frozen motion with the grace of a ballet dancer.

The preparation for all this meticulous sleight-of-hand with sisal occurred in her native country, Switzerland, where she studied architecture, and later textiles, and in this country, at the University of California at Los Angeles, where she earned a master's in fiber arts.

Striking Out Alone After U.C.L.A., she went to work for Jack Larsen, the textile designer and patron of crafts, who gave her her first show, in his showroom on East 59th Street. And in 1969 she was one of the fiber artists whose work was chosen to be shown in an exhibition at the Museum of Modern Art.

All the time at Jack Larsen's, between designing fabrics for airplane interiors or weaving color samples, like a silent spider, she was spinning her own wonderful and outsized webs. When word about her began to spread, and the commissions started to come in, she struck out on her own.

Three years ago she moved into the 35-foot-long top floor of a SoHo loft building. And it is there, when the elevator door is opened after a careful warning knock, that one encounters that immense rubbery vision, and its companion geraniums.

The flow of space in the loft, which was a small manufactory when she took it over, is punctuated with tension-filled hangings of great size and strength. Beyond her work area, festooned with great loops of thick sisal that hang from blocks of wood near the ceiling, is the living half of the loft.

On the other side of a platformed sleeping island, near a feathery, pot-grown tree that spreads luxuriantly beneath a sunny skylight, is the sitting space: a great expanse of red and blue Oriental carpet set on glowing like so many woven rubies and sapphires when the sun pours through the west windows.

"Ideally," said Miss Grossen, looking over the sea of carpet the other day, "I would like no furniture. I would like things just growing out of the walls."

Which is just about what they do. The furniture is spare—a couple of curly wicker rockers; a built-in banquet table, in its black upholstery, is almost a shadow against the rose-lavender of the exposed brick wall; a few low African stools; bookcases flanking the windows; leathery green rhododendron leaves in a tall, bottle-green vase—and the loft, in all its warmth, color and sweep, seems a backdrop for what happens in it.

As lunchtime approached the other day, for example, the large round dining table to one side of the sitting area was turned into an oeuvre.

On the bare butcher block surface quickly went a bright little bowl of radishes, a jar of deep green corianders, a round loaf of bread on a wooden server, two bottles of wine—one deep red, the other pink—the pinky-brown of bams and salami against chalk-white plates; pale yellow butter in a bowl.

And all of it seen against the rosy flow of one of her hangings on the white plaster wall behind the table.

There appears to be a natural interrelationship between work and living space for the artist-craftsman. For, at some point it seems no longer possible to separate, at least in spirit, what is being produced from the atmosphere that produces it.

The Chores and Fun At least half of Miss Grossen's year is occupied with commissions (she works only 10 hours a day—it is difficult to do more, the work is so physically exhausting) the other half, on her own work. And then there are the weeks she answers letters, or sends color slides, or packs crates; and even the occasional week when she sees "three movies, almost one after another" and meets with friends, and cooks and entertains.

But the work never really comes to an end. When it is not being done, it is being mused over, so that by the time she starts something new, it has almost always been thought through.

The moment she dislikes most is the end of a work. Middles are fine, she said the other day, there is a fascination in the process. But, oh, having to decide that something is over, finished. For at that point, the cords must be cut, and the ends of the sisal tied into large, final knots. And all the on-goingness of the work of creating must now lie within the work itself . . .

Françoise Grossen, working at a table, is framed between a pair of her fiber sculptures.

The New York Times/D. Gordon

Europe during the Dark Ages black cats got their reputation: They traveled cozily in the company of witches, it was alleged, and at times they were even the incarnation of those witches. Some years before, however, the Egyptians decided that black cats were in fact symbols of good luck. It is possible this Halloween to test which of these cultures was correct. Go to the Canterbury Book Shop at 1045 Lexington Avenue, where the cats and books about them are displayed, let one cross your path—and see what happens.

Italians Talk Up Their Fine Wines, in a 2-Star Year

By ALVIN SHUSTER

GREVE, Italy, Oct. 26—The vendemmia, or harvest, is under way in this land of chianti, and so is the effort to try once again to overcome the image that all French wines are good and all Italian wines are simply cheap.

In the early hours of the morning, grape pickers are out among the neat rows of the san giovine red grapes, clipping away at the vines and reporting that while 1976 will not be a great year up here, it certainly will be better than a mediocre one. After all, there has been some heavy rain, and even hail, which wiped out parts of some vineyards.

"I would say it is a two-star year," said Mario Corvesio, a master taster for several vineyards in his area. "Last year was marvelous—four stars. This year, somewhat less."

No one can be quite sure about the quality just yet. Not everyone here is sure that, however it turns out, Italy still has an uphill climb to convince the outside world, and the Americans in particular, that wines produced in Italy should be regarded as equal to or better than many of the French.

Wants Acceptance in Westchester "We are trying to make the point that the housewife in Westchester and elsewhere can serve excellent Italian wines at dinner parties and not feel ashamed," said Lapo Mazzel, president of the Chianti Classico Growers Association. There is just nothing in the argument that all French wines are better than all the Italian.

The Italian Government, too, is concerned about building up the image of Italian wines and is spending $1 million this year, despite economic troubles, to bolster the product. It is placing advertisements featuring personalities who proclaim: "Some of my best wines are Italian."

In terms of sales to the United States, Italy does quite well, indeed, better than France. The Italians produce more wine than anybody else in the world—more than two billion gallons a year—and their lead over the French in exports to the United States is widening.

Much of the Italian wine sent to the United States, of course, is regarded as nothing more than "spagbetti wine," with more than 50 percent of the exports in the form of Lambrusco, a grapey, semisparkling and slightly sweet red wine. The makers of more expensive and higher quality Italian wines are those who particularly worry about the image of "French is best."

Chianti Classico District The better Italian wine comes from areas such as this. Here chianti classico—as distinct from just chianti—is produced under regulations designed to keep output relatively low but quality relatively high. The classico district stretches 40 miles between Florence and Siena under boundaries drawn in 1924 by a group of winegrowers who set their own quality controls.

The chianti classico symbol is the black cockerel and those who produce chianti wine outside the boundaries are forbidden by law from using it or from using the description "classico."

"It is the Italian equivalent of Bordeaux," said Arnaldo La Cagnina, a Roman-born American who came here four years ago and transformed a rundown castle and vineyard known as Castello di Gabbiano into a modern business operation. "Italians were making wine even before the French, and they know how to do it. But people still think they can only put away French wines. It's just not true."

Mr. La Cagnina, a 47-year-old former journalist who still owns a home in new Canaan, Conn., gambled this year by waiting a little longer than some of his "classico" neighbors before calling in the vinecutters to work over his 100 acres. Walking in front of his 11th-century castle, he said the gamble had appeared to have paid off because strong winds in recent days, combined with a strong October sun, had helped dry up grapes so long hit by rain.

"A grape grower shakes all year long," he said. "Six months because of the cold, and six months because of fear. The quality of the grapes seems to have improved around here in the past two weeks. We should be all right."

"It Is Still a Struggle" "I think Americans back home are awakening to the value of a good Italian wine, but it is still a struggle. There is this mystique about French wine. The point is that there is Italian wine that should be sipped as carefully as chateau-bottled wine and could well be put in the cellar. Italy doesn't only produce wine in those 'straw things.'"

"The French are great promoters," he added. "I take off my hat to them."

Elsewhere in Italy, where they produce other quality reds such as barolo, barbaresco, gattinara and brunello di montalcino and such quality whites as tocai and pinot grigio, the reports vary on the vintage this year. Despite some disaster areas, optimism is rampant.

For one thing, the decline of the lira has meant a certain stability in world markets for Italian wine prices. For another, there is the comment of one of the workers in Mr. La Cagnina's vineyards.

"It's a year that is not as bad as some," he said. "People worry all the time about Italian wine—I think it's always good."

Waldman's Programming of Four Works at Tully Hall Opener Calls for Virtuoso Instrumental Soloists

The slow, deliberate pacing of Carol Conway's choreography begins to become hypnotic toward the end of a long program such as the one she gave with her company Thursday evening at American Theater Laboratory. What started as an interest in slight shifts of weight in an unaccustomed flow of movement ended with a feeling of tedium.

Among the pieces shown was the new "Bagging at the Bottom," which was designed for the full company of June Anderson, Melissa Fenley, Sandra Sheridan, Will Ansoorge, Craig Sloane, Brian Webb and Miss Conway. It was light and bouncy in tone, but, coming at the end of a long program, it had a certain inevitability in its movement phrases and lacked strong focus. Fast and slow crossing patterns of rolling and hopping succeeded one another and individuals formed transient clusters with others from time to time, but there was little to be divined from any grouping in terms of pattern. Things just seemed to happen and then stopped happening, and that was the end of the dance.

"Red Right Returning," another of Miss Conway's mysteriously titled dances, received strong performances. When Mr. Webb was first seen, with his gilding steps, it was almost like viewing an Indian scout. Miss Conway became his prey and he displayed her in several overhead lifts proudly. They separated and he made one last foray alone, again on the prowl. It worked very well.

"Product of the Sides" had Miss Conway moving back and forth between Mr. Webb and Mr. Ansoorge, only to join bands with both and leave joyously. "Cat Court," another trio, showed Mr. Webb abandoning Miss Conway for Miss Anderson, but the relations were so innocently matter-of-fact.

Vibrant Chita Rivera at the Waldorf

A year and a half ago when Chita Rivera was in town waiting for the start of rehearsals of "Chicago," which were delayed by the illness of Bob Fosse, the director, she took the opportunity to make her New York nightclub debut at the Grand Finales in a lively, fast-moving act written by Fred Ebb (of the team of Ebb and Bob Fosse) and staged by Ron Field.

She is now doing essentially the same act in the Empire Room of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. But what had been a tight, trim exhilarating performance at the Grand Finales has been blown up and expanded to accommodate its new surroundings and, in the process, much of the vivacity and a great deal of the charm that were enjoyed in the smaller room have been dissipated.

The trio that accompanied her at the Grand Finales is now a 30-piece orchestra.

The two boys who once danced and sang with Miss Rivera are now three. And the Empire Room's blaring sound system makes everything seem even more enormous and oppressive than necessary.

But you cannot bury Chita Rivera. She is a flashing bundle of energy, dancing, pacing the long stage, her voice cutting through whatever turbulence surrounds her. And there are moments of contrast when, with just Peter Howard's piano playing softly behind her, she has an opportunity to show the gentler side of a vocal style that can also erupt into the ripping consonants of "America" or the brash belting of "And All That Jazz." It is still a lively act but no longer has the impact that the intimacy and the challenge of limitations of the Grand Finales made possible.

'Gemini Man,' 'Mr. T and Tina' Lose Out in TV Ratings Battle

Two low-rated series—"Gemini Man," on NBC-TV, and "Mr. T and Tina," on ABC-TV, were canceled yesterday by their respective networks in attempts to improve their ratings position. So far this season, ABC has been first in the ratings, with NBC in second place.

NBC will revamp its Thursday night schedule starting Nov. 11 by moving the one-hour variety series "Van Dyke and Company" from its 10 P.M. time period to the "Gemini Man" period, opening at 8 P.M. "Gibbsville," a one-hour drama series starring Gig Young and John Savage and based on the stories of John O'Hara, will replace "Van Dyke and Company" at 10 P.M.

The pilot of "Gibbsville" was shown last spring as a made-for-television movie. The series was supposed to have its premiere at the start of the fall season, but was postponed.

ABC will replace "Mr. T and Tina" on Saturday nights at 8:30 with another half-hour comedy program, "What's Happening?" beginning Nov. 13. The program, about three middle-class black high school students, was originally pre-empted on the network this year as a summer replacement.

Round-Robins a Threat To Tournament Tennis

Players love it as an easy payday. Promoters see it as a chance for a big score. Spectators drool over a cozy weekend with a select group of stars.

By NEIL AMDUR

The round-robin has been a part of pro tennis as far back as the era of Tilden and Budge. It differs from the tournament format in that each player meets every other, with the winner determined by an overall won-lost record rather than single elimination.

What has changed in round robins is the lure. At a recent four-player event in Caracas, Venezuela, the winner, Ilie Nastase, received $37,000, and the fourth-place finisher, Adriano Panatta, was guaranteed $18,000 even for not winning a match.

Another four-player event is on this weekend in Buenos Aires, featuring Guillermo Vilas, the country's top tennis attraction, but without the approval of the Argentine tennis federation.

Still another round robin, of the eight-player, winner-take-all variety with $320,000 in prize money, was announced here yesterday by World Championship Tennis and Caesars Palace.

Nets Fall to Pacers As Late Rally Fails

By SAM GOLDAPER

UNIONDALE, L. I., Oct. 29—On the night that the Nets gave out their championship rings, the man most responsible for that title was 120 miles away in Philadelphia.

In winning their second National Basketball Association game in five starts, the Pacers made a quick recovery after some horrible first-half play. They opened the second half with a 15-3 burst for a 55-49 advantage and then staved off a Net comeback in the final seconds.

The Pacers reverted to some sloppy play in the closing minutes and would have lost the game except that Don Buse stole the ball from the driving Nate Archibald with three seconds remaining.

Dan Roundfield, a substitute forward forced to switch to center after Len Elmore had knee surgery, scored the last 4 points for the Pacers, including a tap of a missed Darnell Hillman shot that proved to be the winning basket. With the Pacers ahead, 86-83, Roundfield made two free throws after he was fouled by Kim Hughes with 1 minute and 38 seconds remaining, putting the Pacers' lead at 88-83. Archibald cut the deficit to a point with a pair of free throws and a layup, following a steal from Hillman.

Backcourt Sparks Nets

Williamson, who scored 20 points, 18 in the first half, was taken out of the game midway in the final period.

"We were getting back pretty good with what we had," said Kevin Loughbery, the Nets' coach. "I didn't think of putting him back for the last play."

em Is Up for the Big Game Today, and Tonight

nd of Bethune-Cookman College, entertaining crowds outside its Office Building at 125th Street in Harlem yesterday.

They're going to turn the clock back in Harlem today—not just to standard time and maybe not all the way back to the heyday of Harlem, but at least back to 1973.

That's the last time the football game, now known as the New York Urban League Whitney M. Young Jr. Memorial Classic, was scheduled for Yankee Stadium, and also the last time it was anywhere close to a sellout.

It was at Shea Stadium in Queens for the last couple of years. And although Flushing Meadow is not exactly out of town, it doesn't have the cozy proximity to Harlem that Yankee Stadium has, sitting as it does on the rim of the South Bronx.

So Harlem, just across the short Macombs Dam Bridge at 155th Street, could be the site of one of the sport's largest taiga parties again. "We're expecting a larger turnout than we had in the past two years while the team was at Shea, mainly because people were too tired to come back into Manhattan after going out to Queens," said Bill Hickman, the general manager of Charles's Gallery on West 125th Street, which was formerly Frank's Restaurant, a famous Harlem night spot.

Charles's Gallery is under the same ownership now as Small's Paradise, up Adam Clayton Powell Jr. Boulevard (formerly Seventh Avenue) at 135th Street. Both places are planning live entertainment after the game.

Two Winning Records The game this year, as usual, is between two predominantly black schools from the South. Norfolk State College of Virginia is making its second straight appearance, having lost, 26-0, to Grambling at Shea last year. And Bethune-Cookman, a tiny school of about 1,100 in Daytona Beach, Fla., is making its first appearance and is filled by one of the private, church-affiliated schools under the United Negro College Fund.

Neither Grambling nor Morgan State, two schools that still have a huge sentimental following among blacks in the North, could make the game this year. But both Norfolk State, at 5-2, and Bethune-Cookman, 6-1, had better won-lost records this season than Morgan State or Grambling. They don't have quite the reputation, however, so some tickets probably will be available at Yankee Stadium before the oom downbeat for the two-hour pregame show featuring Harold Melvin and the Blue Notes.

The entertainment won't end with the game, either. "We're planning to stay open until 7 A.M. Sunday morning," said Elizabeth Wells, who for 38 years with her husband, Joseph has owned the nationally known Wells's Restaurant at 132d Street and Powell Boulevard. "We always have live entertainment on Friday and Saturday nights anyway, but we're also planning a disco and meals Saturday night."

Feelings of Home

There are going to be parties and dancing all over Harlem—at the Baby Grand on West 125th Street, at 22 West and Mr. B's up near 135th Street, at Jock's Place and at the Red Rooster at 138th Street and Powell Boulevard—as well as at dozens of other clubs and meeting places in Harlem and the Bronx.

Mrs. Gwendolyn Douglas, owner of the Red Rooster, sounded the keynote of most of the parties when she said, "We're having a 'down home open house.'"

"I'm not as uptight as I used to be," Bo explained. "I know that losing a football game is not the end of the world." Bit the Michigan coach had to learn that the hard way. Twice. The night before the 1970 Rose Bowl game he suffered a heart attack. He recovered quickly. While playing paddleball early last spring, he felt a tightness in his chest.

"After the heart attack," his wife, Millie, was saying now over the telephone from their Ann Arbor, Mich., home, "his heart was always in the back of our minds."

The 100,000-Average Crowd After the scare last spring, Bo sought advice from heart specialists in Houston and Cleveland where he underwent stress tests. His heart was hooked up to an electrocardiogram as he walked on a treadmill. After a few minutes, he was puffing. The blood supply to his heart was insufficient.

"They told me, if I stopped coaching, I might be all right," Bo recalled, "but if I kept coaching, I needed an operation." Bo wanted to keep coaching, just as he had kept coaching after the heart attack that put him in a Pasadena hospital instead of in the Rose Bowl his first season as the Michigan coach. He had been hired for $21,000, only $1,000 more than his salary as a Miami (Ohio) University coach. He earns $40,000 now plus another $40,000 from his weekly TV show as the Wolverines are assured this season of being the first team in sports history to average 100,000 spectators at their home games.

But in his first year, he was trying to make it big. Trying too hard. He was out recruiting almost every night, "slipping in greasy spoons for a dinner of hamburgers and chili at 1 o'clock in the morning." His weight was up to 225

Bo Schembechler sounded as if he were talking about a wide receiver. "He's fast," Bo said, "and he's got good hands." But the Michigan coach was talking about Dr. Otto Gago, who performed open-heart surgery on him. "In the operation," Bo said, "they stop your heart from beating, so the doctor's got to be fast. And he needs good hands because you don't want him to drop anything in there."

McGee Leads by a Stroke With 70-137

PENSACOLA, Fla., Oct. 29 (AP)— Jerry McGee overcame two consecutive bogeys, blustery winds and cold weather as he scored a one-under-par 70 that put him alone at the top after the second round today in the $125,000 Pensacola opeo golf tournament. His margin was a stroke.

McGee, who has earned more than $125,000 this season, won this tournament last year, his only tour victory. He had a 36-hole total of 137, five under par on the 6,549-yard Pensacola Country Club course, made more difficult by the cold, windy conditions.

A former Masters champion, Tommy Aaron, one of three golfers tied with McGee at the end of the first round, scrambled to a 71 and was second at 138. The other two first-round leaders, John Schlee and Bob Murphy, each scored to a 76-143.

Lee Elder, who won here in 1974, Frank Beard and Mac McLeod, the winner last week in Columbus, Ga., were two shots off the pace at 139. McLendon played his back nine in 32 on his way to a 69, Beard was delighted with his 70 and Elder, so cold he wore mittens between shots, matched par 71.

"These conditions make it difficult," said Tom Weiskopf, whose 72 put him at 140, and tied with Robert Green among others. "It's so cold you don't have any feel in your hands." Green had a 68.

Lee Trevino and Jerry Pate, who is from the area and won both the United States and Canadian Opens this year, were at 142.

Strange Leads Wills Golf SYDNEY, Australia, Oct. 29 (AP)— Curtis Strange overcame an upset stomach and a bad start to widen his lead to three strokes after today's second round of the $160,000 Wills-Bulletin opeo golf tournament.

Strange carded a three-under-par 69 on the 7,100-yard, par-72 Australian golf course for a 36-hole total of 140, three strokes ahead of Jack Nicklaus and four in front of Terry Keadall of New Zealand.

Nicklaus, who started the day at par, was three under with two holes to play but took a double-bogey on the 17th, giving him a 71-143. Kendall posted his second 72 for 144.

Maurice Benbridge of Britain, who had a 74, was tied for fourth at 142 with David Graham, who had a second-round 73.

College Football Today Focuses on Cambridge

By GORDON S. WHITE JR.

Yale and Brown met in the final game of the Ivy League championship of formal round-robin football in 1956. They were tied, 10-7, and the game was effectively behind a versatile quarterback, John Anderson, who led the Ivy League to a 10-7 victory over Brown.

Over today as Brown meets under similar circumstances in Cambridge, Mass., the Ivy League title will be settled in the game with Yale, on Nov. 13 at Cambridge. If Brown wins, the title must go to Yale to lose once more, or else Brown may have to settle for a tie for the Ivy crown. Yale is tied with Harvard and Cornell for the league lead. The Elis play Cornell today at New Haven.

Tony Dorsett of Pittsburgh will probably become the leading rusher in the history of college football today at Pittsburgh. He needs 62 yards to achieve this goal, and he has run for more than 100 yards in each of his last 15 games. He set the record for major college career rushing last Saturday against Navy. The most rushing yardage in a career in all college football was gained by Howard Stevens over four seasons ended 1972. He rushed for 5,287 yards playing for Randolph-Macon College, in Ashland, Va., and later for the University of Louisville.

Ricky Bell, Dorsett's leading competition for the Heisman Trophy, will be running again today for Southern California, in a game at Los Angeles against California. He was forced to the sideline last week after six carries for 63 yards when he suffered a hip injury. This injury bursitis a lot but is not crippling, so Bell should be ready to go today.

Rutgers goes for its 15th straight victory as the Scarlet Knights begin to have bowl ideas. Massachusetts is the opposition, at New Brunswick, N.J. The Yankee Conference team may give the Scarlet Knights a stiff game, although it was upset by Connecticut last week as the Huskies galloped their first victory of the year. Peach Bowl and Liberty Bowl officials seem interested in Rutgers.

Harlem Is Up for the Big Game And Festivities Surrounding It

who were either born in the South or whose parents came from there, those words evoke warm feelings of home. And the menus at most of the night spots will be fried chicken, barbecued spare ribs and other soul-food specialties. Nobody is emphasizing the game's original slogan as yet, but this year's football classic could bring back the feeling that it's "more than just a football game."

For the thousands who have already arrived from the Daytona Beach and Norfolk areas, and from elsewhere along the Atlantic Coastline, the game is an excuse for coming to the Big Apple, while uptown it is just a brief interlude in the "happenings" and parties that will precede and follow it. Downtown hotels were making arrangements with the Urban League as early as Thursday night. Alumni parties began around town last night, and there were breakfast parties early this morning.

The 95-piece Bethune-Cookman band gave a sample of its high-stepping soul sound on the steps of the New York State Office Building yesterday at noon, and at 9 A.M. this morning it was to step off from 110th Street and Powell Boulevard, along with the Norfolk State band, for a parade up to 142d Street that will feature parade queens, open cars and horse-drawn carriages. The bands also will perform at halftime of the game, which is scheduled for a 2 P.M. kickoff.

Buddy Young, a former pro football player who works in the commissioner's office in the National Football League, says the N.F.L. has a figure, called the basic economic multiplier, to calculate how much money visitors from out of town spend on football-game activities such as today's. From $39 a person five years ago, the figure has been driven up by inflation to an average of $75.

Multiply that by the attendance at today's game, and tonight's celebrations, and it comes to the biggest time in Harlem between oom and New Year's Eve.

Resurgence of Round-Robin A Threat to Tourney Tennis

the top players but hurt the circuit as a whole," Witt contended. "And there's no formula on the men's tour for guaranteeing players to a tournament. We're at the mercy of whatever list A.T.P. [Association of Tennis Professionals] gives us."

Witt said the sponsor of his tournament, a large hotel chain in Hawaii, was so upset over the absence of 10 top players from the initial list of entries that it threatened to cut the $100,000 event to an eight-player, $30,000 tournament.

"At one point, we did not have one player in the top 10," Witt said by phone from Hawaii during a recent interview. "When you put up $100,000 as a sponsor, you'd like to feel you're getting something."

Man's tournaments in Brisbane, Australia ($50,000), Tokyo ($100,000) and Manila ($75,000) were faced with similar promotional problems because of the lack of a strong entry, Witt said.

The round-robin problem is limited basically to the men's tour. Because no formal sanctions are required, round-robins can operate independently of Grand Prix tournament supervision.

Criticized as Exhibitions

Critics contend that round-robins lack the competitive excitement of tournaments and are little more than exhibitions. Bjorn Borg, the Swedish star, appeared to confirm this when he was asked at Forest Hills how seriously he regarded the Caracas event that included Nastase, Panatta and Jimmy Connors.

"It is more of an exhibition," Borg said, which made promoters wince.

Yet more round-robins than ever are on the drawing board for next year, a predicament that may further fragment the tour. And when a first-round loser in the Fireman's Fund tournament receives $450, such inconsistencies do not help stabilize an already tenuous situation among the men's players.

"We believe players have the right to be able to play where they want to," said Bob Briner, executive director of A.T.P., which represents over 200 players on the tournament circuit. "It's incumbent for players to realize where these little deals arise. They arise because of tournament tennis. Tournament tennis is the foundation, the base, of every good thing that happens to a tennis player."

Briner believes that there are enough quality players to survive the round-robin craze. Tournament directors and sponsors disagree.

"There's a lot of nouveau promoters who see the round-robin as a new idea and easy way to make money," said MacKay, who played under the format as a pro 12 years ago before the big-money era of open tennis arrived in 1968. "If players continue to choose these things, it will be great for them, but it will be short-run and hurt tournament tennis."

Briner countered: "There's never been a tournament director who thinks he's got everybody. If he has everybody, he thinks he should get him Tilden." Witt contended that one pro had pulled out of his tournament giving a medical excuse and then played in an eight-man event in Laguna Beach, Calif., the same weekend. Briner said such violators would be subject to disciplinary action.

"There's no question the round-robin is in the players' short-run economic interest," said Ray Benton, a lawyer who represents players and also promotes tournaments, including one made-for-TV event called "The Pepsi Grand Slam." "There's certainly a danger there."

Some tennis officials believe big-money round-robins will wind up like big-money challenge matches — momentary flashes on the sport's still-expanding horizon.

Hunt, Caesars Palace Back Tourney

Lamar Hunt, the oil baron who seems to be pushing professional tennis up to equivalent status with the oil industry, came out yesterday with another of his media events, a $320,000 round-robin affair of eight players, including Jimmy Connors and Ili Nastase.

"World Championship Tennis, of which Hunt is co-owner, and Caesars Palace, a hotel and casino in Las Vegas, Nev., will cooperate in the venture, which will run in three stages — Dec. 2-5, Dec. 18-19, 1976, and April 10, 1977."

Besides Connors and Nastase the field includes Adriano Panatta, Ken Rosewall, Rod Laver, Manuel Orantes, Eddie Dibbs and Harold Solomon.

They will be divided into two divisions. Each preliminary match will be for $10,000, winner-take-all. The semifinals for the four players with the best records in the two divisions will be for $50,000, also winner-take-all. Altogether, there will be 14 preliminaries.

The two players with the best records in each division will meet next April for the $100,000 winner-take-all final.

The preliminaries will be taped for syndicated television, and the promoters hope to broadcast the final on a major TV network.

The W.C.T.-Caesars Palace Challenge Cup is the second of its kind. The first, which Nastase won, was the W.C.T.-Avis Challenge Cup in Hawaii. Avis has not renewed its sponsorship.

EAST
C.W. Post (6-1)	0-21	Following first loss in 10 games, Post has another one that isn't easy.
Lafayette (1-5)	15-5	Series started in 1883, with Lafayette holding a slim edge of 25-23-5. Colgate is unbeaten partly because it has allowed 10.1 points per game.
Boston Univ. (2-4)	—	—
Delaware (4-2-1)	0-29	Delaware is having troubles but still holds lead in Lambert Bowl voting.
Columbia (2-4)	22-17	Columbia Lions have suffered many injuries to stand up to Big Green.
Cortland St. (3-4)	10-7	East Stroudsburg's 16-game winning streak is one of best in the nation. Loser may be out of the running for the Ivy League title this season.
Brown (5-1)	45-26	The Crusaders are not doing too well with that wishbone offense in 1976.
Rhode Island (2-3)	—	—
Gettysburg (3-4)	56-22	After getting a fast start, Lehigh has dropped three of last four contests.
Syracuse (3-4)	36-0	Tony Dorsett and Panthers have their eyes on the Orange Bowl game, Jan. 1.
Penn State (4-3)	25-26	Penn State has won three Carolinas and might have bowl ideas again.
Boston Coll. (5-1)	12-41	Eagles' big defenses should prove too much for anything Wildcats have.
Cornell (1-5)	20-14	If Yale and Harvard win look for The Game to settle Ivy championship.
SOUTH
Miss. St. (6-1)	21-10	Unbelievable but true Alabama and Miss. St. tied for 5th spot in S.E.C. Each of these teams has had their high hopes for the season dampened.
Georgia Tech (3-3-1)	6-21	—
Auburn (3-4)	31-14	Big game for the Southeastern Conference lead and possible Sugar Bowl. Something just to keep on the streets of Tallahassee tonight.
Clemson (1-4-2)	43-7	William and Mary is having one of better football seasons in memory.
Wm. & Mary (5-2)	21-6	Cincinnati is unusual team with one loss but claims of being unbeaten.
Cincinnati (5-1)	—	—
Mississippi (5-3)	13-17	Mississippi is not completely out of picture for the S.E.C. championship.
Kentucky (4-3)	10-10	Here a regional television game that might just be difficult for Teps.
N.C. State (3-4-1)	21-28	N.C. State finally turned things around and won three Carolinas.
Memphis St. (5-2)	—	—
Virginia (1-6)	21-22	Memphis State is doing unexpectedly well and Tulane has stopped the skid.
West Virginia (3-4)	7-10	Virginia had first victory in 18 games when it won last season's Pac-7.
No. Carolina (5-2)	21-9	West Virginia still not in Penn State's class in at home with V.P.I. Wake Forest is up ahead of The Game in the Atlantic Coast Conference.
MIDWEST
Wisconsin (3-4)	9-18	Illini and Badgers can battle for some spot in the middle of Big Ten pack.
Ohio State (5-1-1)	14-24	Just a week after Michigan, the poor Hoosiers have to take on Buckeyes.
Northwestern (0-7)	24-21	Northwestern hasn't won since it beat Indiana in 5th game of 1975.
Kansas State (1-6)	17-7	Texas State had some of its Big plans in Big Eight shattered just last week.
Nebraska (6-1-1)	0-16	Big Eight Conference is up for grabs and here are two that are grabbing.
Minnesota (5-2)	28-21	Like Brown Jug is at stake on TV game to be seen in New York City.
Purdue (3-4)	10-20	Spartans and Bolshoi-makers are just out of the Big Ten's Little Eight.
Notre Dame (5-1)	10-31	Lowly Midshipmen are going to Cleveland to meet recently impressive Irish.
Missouri (5-2)	14-41	Each of those pulled upstate last week and Missouri is erratic if anything.
SOUTHWEST
Rice (2-4)	20-16	Razorbacks share Southwest Conference lead and must stop Rice passing.
T.C.U. (0-6)	—	—
Texas A. & M. (5-2)	3-36	Houston finally suffered first S.W.C. loss but plays against Fresno State.
Texas (3-1-1)	18-42	Mustangs going nowhere as expected. Argies going nowhere, surprisingly.
		Texas Tech, remaining chance for unbeaten S.W.C. team in Cotton Bowl.
FAR WEST
Ariz. State (2-4)	—	—
Oklahoma (5-1-1)	20-21	Once upon a time there was a highly ranked Arizona State and then.... Oklahoma shocked by Okla. State and now runs risk from Buffalo charge.
Wyoming (6-1)	3-0	Cowboys of Wyoming like it up in W.A.C. lead, where team goes bowling.
Wash. St. (1-6)	26-14	These two sharing the Pac-8 pillar just as one might have expected.
California (3-4)	14-28	Ricky Bell, slightly hurt last week, should gobble up more yardage again.
Oregon St. (1-6)	28-22	Stanford still has outside chance at Rose Bowl spot, even if it loses.
U.C.L.A. (6-0-1)	17-13	U.C.L.A. must be alert because Huskies could reach out for Rose Bowl.

TV game.

The World of Mao

By JOHN LEONARD

WIND IN THE TOWER. Mao Tse-tung and the Chinese Revolution 1949-1976. By John Leonard. 416 pages. Little, Brown, $12.50.

One reads the news from China as if one were reading a science-fiction novel. "Dune," says Frank Herbert.

What does it mean that Mao's widow, Chiang Ching, has been arrested along with three "leftists" in the past few months ago?

Han Suyin certainly pumps for sainthood. Dr. Han, born in China in 1917 of a Belgian mother and a Chinese father, is a novelist ("A Many-Splendored Thing," etc.) and an autobiographer ("The Crippled Tree," etc.) and an essayist ("Asia Today," etc.).

The Nixon Visit. But "Wind in the Tower" reads for the most part like the minutes of the Chinese revolution, edited down to 400 pages, from the 12-year agricultural policy of 1949 to the Fourth National People's Congress in 1975.

Another question is whether such a revolution is a good idea. Millions of people disappeared during those "excesses." There's something oddly statistical about the approach: the chaotic behavior of millions of individuals will arrive at a truth more important than the casualty count.

What's current, topical and adds immeasurably to your understanding of education today? "About Education" An every-Wednesday feature in The New York Times on into the dreary night. Nevertheless, a vivid picture emerges of what may be the most astounding feat of social engineering in human history, and of an amazing Mao clearing "the mass line" between opportunists on the right and left.

Open Question. This, of course, is breathtaking. And the fact that China, with its own considerable oil deposits, is self-sufficient as a nation is immensely important.

Another question is whether such a revolution is a good idea. Millions of people disappeared during those "excesses." There's something oddly statistical about the approach: the chaotic behavior of millions of individuals will arrive at a truth more important than the casualty count.

Well, the People's Republic of China is only 27 years old, and a book reviewer for The Times is almost by definition a petty bourgeois literateur with a bad case of recalcitrant mountaintopism.

Another Tax Cut?

Does the nation need a tax cut next year? President Ford, in the final days of the campaign, has said that he would make another Federal income tax cut "the number one priority in the next Ford Administration." Governor Carter has refused to commit himself to a tax cut if he is elected, but says it's a possibility.

Mr. Ford's position is not a new one—and it is not offered now because the President thinks the underemployed economy necessarily needs extra fiscal stimulus. Rather, tax reduction is basic to Mr. Ford's ideological position that the United States Government is too big, and that the way to reduce it is to cut taxes as a means of forcing cuts in expenditures. This idea lay behind his proposal in the last Congressional session for a simultaneous $28-billion cut in taxes and expenditures, which Congress rejected. Congress did cut taxes $18 billion, but Mr. Ford still wants the extra $10 billion.

Mr. Carter's reserved position on a tax cut is based on his concern that to promise a tax cut now would be irresponsible. The massive foul-up by the Office of Management and Budget over how much money the Administration has spent in the past year—with a huge shortfall of $15 billion still unexplained—raises the probability that additional spending of roughly that amount will be up in 1977. A Ford Administration that invests against inflation and budgetary irresponsibility is never willing to cut taxes, come hell or high water.

Mr. Carter would also like to hold tax reduction in reserve as a means of facilitating a major tax reform. Since he has committed himself to achieving a balanced budget by fiscal 1981, it might be rash for him to commit billions to tax reduction, before his expenditure programs for dealing with social problems have taken shape.

Immediately, however, the national economy is flagging—and may need the quick stimulus of a tax cut next year, as Mr. Carter's economic advisers have warned. By keeping his options open on tax reduction, Mr. Carter may seem to lack the ideological fervor or simplicity of Mr. Ford—but, given the uncertainties in the economic and budgetary situation, his reserve makes more sense.

Honor Among Officers

Bucking the military system has never been a very effective way of hucking for promotion. The latest illustration of that rule is the case of Capt. Arthur Lincoln, the military lawyer and West Point graduate who successfully challenged the Military Academy's handling of its massive cheating scandal that has led to the resignation or expulsion of more than 150 cadets. It has now been learned that Captain Lincoln has since been passed over for a promotion that appears to have been warranted by his record and was transferred from criminal to civil legal duties at the Academy.

There is, of course, never any sure way for outside observers to judge the factors that affect decisions concerning a promotion. But in this case, any effort to venture an intelligent guess cannot ignore the fact that the Army last May ordered Captain Lincoln to be transferred out of West Point. The order was subsequently rescinded when the connection between his defense of a cadet charged with a breach of the honor code and the transfer raised too many public questions. Nor is it easy to overlook the coincidence that two other Army lawyers who joined Captain Lincoln in his efforts to initiate an inquiry into the handling of the scandal were also moved from criminal to civil affairs.

Captain Lincoln's decision to leave the Academy and the Army would seem to be a loss to the military. It is a loss, too, for the defense of the kind of integrity that the West Point honor code, whose rigidity has encouraged hypocrisy more than honor, has so signally failed to uphold. It is ironic that less than honorable maneuvering to teach Captain Lincoln a lesson was apparently intended to protect the honor code at West Point.

Puerto Rico's Election

While voters in the fifty states are electing a President Tuesday, Puerto Rico will be choosing a Governor in a contest certain to have an impact on the island's political status. If the voters give the Popular Democratic Party's Rafael Hernández Colón a second four-year term, they will be endorsing his plan for continuing and extensively refining Puerto Rico's self-governing Commonwealth relationship with the mainland.

Polls indicate victory for the 40-year-old Governor. But Mr. Hernández faces a formidable opponent in Carlos Romero Barceló, 43-year-old Mayor of San Juan, whose New Progressive Party seeks to make Puerto Rico the 51st state of the Union. Mr. Romero has played down statehood in his campaign, and said recently that the island's status was not an election issue, but he believes strongly that "Commonwealth has reached the end of the road."

Mainland politics figures heavily in this contest between two young, intelligent, attractive candidates. The Ford Administration has marked time for more than a year on a new "Compact of Permanent Union between Puerto Rico and the United States," which includes Governor Hernández' ideas for expanding the island's political autonomy within the Commonwealth frame. The Governor's Popular Democrats are linked to the mainland Democratic Party, Mayor Romero's New Progressives to the G.O.P.

The major international interest in the election, however, will center on the showings of two candidates favoring outright independence for Puerto Rico: Senator Rubén Berrios Martínez of the Puerto Rican Independence Party, which polled 4.5 percent in 1972, and Juan Mari Bras of the Marxist-Leninist Puerto Rican Socialist Party, which is participating for the first time.

Mr. Mari Bras is Cuba's star witness at the United Nations decolonization committee's annual exercise in hypocrisy over "self-determination and independence" for Puerto Rico. But Senator Berrios' Independentistas are expected to make substantial gains over their 1972 showing, largely because of Puerto Rico's severely depressed economy.

The heady days of "Operation Bootstrap," when Puerto Rico was hailed as a model for developing small countries, are definitely over. The island suffers from galloping inflation, an acute energy shortage and an unemployment rate that probably exceeds 30 percent. In these conditions, the island's long-run status is anything but clear.

What is clear is that Puerto Rico is again about to exercise freely the inalienable right of self-determination that its United Nations critics fatuously demand; and that about 90 percent of its qualified voters are expected at the polls. That is a turnout that ought to embarrass mainland Americans and give pause to those meddling at the U.N. from countries where free elections are never permitted.

Britain's Tough Choice

Prime Minister James Callaghan has warned the International Monetary Fund—and the United States and Britain's other principal allies—against trying "to force us into policies which would be so harmful to the economy that we would go into a downward spiral." But this appears to distort for domestic political reasons what Britain is likely to be asked to do, as a condition for receiving the $3.9 billion it seeks from the I.M.F. Essentially, the I.M.F. is likely to insist that the Callaghan Government live up to the very stabilization program it has already announced as being in Britain's own best interests.

This program includes three major goals: to keep the money supply from growing at no more than a 12 percent annual rate; to bring public sector borrowing down from 9 percent of Britain's total domestic output to 6 percent; and to keep in place through the coming year the Government's incomes policy, which limits wage increases to 5 percent per annum.

Those measures are not so harsh as to wreck the British economy; indeed, they may be too mild to restore confidence in sterling, for the markets may conclude that with inflation continuing or coming down very slowly, it is still too risky to continue holding pounds.

It does not seem credible that the I.M.F., under United States prodding, would—as reported by a British newspaper—have demanded that the Labor Government devalue the pound to $1.50 as the price of getting the $3.9 billion loan. Both the I.M.F. and the United States have abandoned the idea of a "right rate" for any currency, and in the midst of Britain's monetary crisis it would be foolhardy to try to peg sterling—and hand billions of dollars over to speculators willing to bet on a further fall of the pound.

If the British Government wants to prevent the pound from continuing to fall, it must, at minimum, hold to the monetary and fiscal guidelines it has already announced. If that is not enough, Britain would have to choose between alternatives. One would be to take an isolationist line, including import controls (which would threaten to set off a round of trade restrictions by other countries) and troop withdrawals from the NATO command.

The other would be to let the exchange rate of the pound go, and hope that, by adhering to "sensible" fiscal and monetary policies over the longer run, the pound would ultimately stabilize at a level appropriate to Britain's real productive and export potentials. That route would involve dangers of ongoing inflation, depreciation, and withdrawal from Britain of funds for investment—and hence a continuing downward spiral in Britain's capacity to produce—unless Britain stuck to fiscal and monetary policies that were truly non-inflationary.

But has Britain the political will to do it? Even the moderate program to check inflation put forth by Prime Minister Callaghan has received a damaging rebuff from the majority of the executive committees of the Labor Party, which voted this week to support a lobby fighting against public spending cuts proposed by the Labor Government.

It is in the strong interests of the entire world monetary system—and the Western alliance—to help the British avoid either a swing to protectionism and isolation or a spiraling economic torнадо; and the big loan through the I.M.F. can help Britain buy a little more time. But only the British people and their Government can take the steps that will halt the inflation that is the underlying cause of Britain's troubles.

Policemen's Decision

Delegates of the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association hold the fate of their union, the Police Department and potentially the city itself in their hands next week when they vote on revised contract terms proposed by mediator Michael J. Sovern, dean of the Columbia Law School.

The new package does not meet their demands for exclusion from the one-year pay freeze that other municipal unions long ago accepted, or from other sacrifices that have been imposed on city employees and the citizens in general by an unprecedented fiscal crisis. There is no way city officials could meet those demands without breaking faith with the other unions, undermining the financial plan and, as an inevitable consequence, losing essential state and Federal support.

The result would be bankruptcy, with tragic consequences for the city—and its policemen. We hope the delegates will have the sense and the courage to accept their president's realistic assessment that the settlement is the best they can get. To continue to heed the hotheads who demand more when there is no more; would be an act of irresponsible folly that could only result in fewer benefits and jobs for P.B.A. members.

Letters to the Editor

Presidency: To Turn Vision Into Policy

To the Editor:
The major issue in the current campaign for the Presidency is that of leadership.

Both Governor Carter and President Ford have attempted to convey to the electorate something of their capacities and capabilities to govern and lead the nation. The signals have been, at best, mixed. They have been conveyed for the most part through a series of general policy pronouncements rather than through detailed discussion of concrete policies. In fact, there has been rather limited discussion of policies in contrast to an almost limitless discussion of programs. But pronouncements will not generate policy, and policy is incapable of being produced by the invocation of political symbols—contemporary or historical. The irony is that while serious discussion of policy is required by the magnitude and scope of the problems confronting the nation, it is all but precluded by the more mundane requirements of political campaigning.

The candidates have attempted to communicate their respective visions of a nation on the move again. But such visions are likely to be nothing more than mere visions unless attention is also focused on the knowledge and hard calculations required to transform them into practical policy options.

Leadership must be grounded in the ability to both generate and restore confidence in the capacity of governmental institutions to develop fundamental policies capable of sustaining public confidence and mobilizing public support. The manipulation of political symbols and code words, e.g., "law and order," may in the short, short run promote political quiescence but cannot in the long run promote political solutions or insure domestic tranquility.

Presidential leadership is critical to maintaining the authority of government to enact policies which are in the public interest. Much campaign discussion has emphasized the reformation of governmental institutions with the implication that such reform will in some sense result in improved policies. However, without equal attention for the substance of policy no amount of institutional tinkering will culminate in improved or "better" policies. Improvements in the processes through which policies are made are simply not equivalent to "better" policies.

Regardless of whether the electorate chooses Governor Carter or President Ford to lead the nation, it would be misleading to interpret that choice as a mandate from the people simply to lead. Given the prevailing mood of public constraint, if not public apathy, it is highly unlikely that either candidate as President could generate sustained support for policies devoid of substance. To believe otherwise is to exacerbate the current crisis of confidence in the restoration of Presidential leadership.

Necessary Flu Shots

To the Editor:

As a physician charged not only with the care of individual patients but also with the preventive care of students, personnel and faculty of a medical, educational and research institution, I feel compelled to express my regrets concerning your negative editorial comments on Oct. 14 on the national influenza vaccination program. In your paper on Oct. 12 appeared a letter from Prof. Jerome Schulman expressing a well-reasoned, knowledgeable and balanced opinion of the primary issues involved in the present program to immunize individuals against the prevalent strains of influenza virus. Dr. Schulman explained clearly and cogently that the elderly or infirm members of our society need the protection offered by immunization against last season's Victoria strain of Type A influenza virus, according to well-accepted standards of preventive medical practice.

Of Chile and the U.S.

To the Editor:

The assertion by Mr. David W. Slater (letter Oct. 15) that Americans can be grateful and proud of any part that the U.S. Government played in overthrowing Allende's socialist regime in Chile shows a lack of respect for the universally accepted principle of international law which establishes the right every country has of self-determination; after all, President Allende was elected democratically, by the people of Chile.

Probably Mr. Slater feels proud of all the maneuvers the C.I.A. used in order to remove the Allende Government. Furthermore, perhaps Mr. Slater feels proud also of the suppression of human rights, arbitrary arrests, torture, deportation and crimes with which Chile's ruling military junta, supported by the U.S. Government, has been charged by the United Nations Committee on Human Rights (this report appears in the same issue in which his letter was published).

As a result of the U.S. interference in the domestic affairs of other countries, America has lost the respect it used to have in the international community. I hope that whoever is the winner in the Nov. 2 elections, commits himself to making America proud again.

Panama: Time for Divorce

To the Editor:

It was a disappointment to hear the way the Presidential candidates answered the question on the Panama Canal problem in their foreign-policy debate, a fact you have also pointed out. Governor Carter's statement was particularly disappointing because it conflicts with his party's platform position, which firmly backs the negotiations.

Such attitudes add to the danger of an already explosive situation in my country, and they create angry responses there. This in turn motivates uncertainty among Americans about the safety of American citizens in Panama, as evidenced by the calls we get in the consulate on this matter.

These callers are not aware that the people of Panama and the United States have many things in common, that thousands of Americans have lived, worked and enjoyed a peaceful and meaningful life in the Republic of Panama and are doing so right now in this period of high tension, when so many alarming reports are published in newspapers.

Panamanians have no animosity toward the American people as such. Thousands of us have studied and lived in your country and enjoyed your friendship; but we cannot accept your official policy with regard to Panama, and we cannot endure any longer your present relationship.

We have been raped for 73 years, but the United States insists it is done legally, through a marriage agreement signed in 1903. If such a marriage took place it was a shotgun wedding and it is time for a divorce. The question is whether we can reach an amicable understanding or whether we must suffer great emotional and physical strain before establishing a new relationship.

Only the President of the United States can determine which alternative will prevail, and it is his duty to explain clearly to the Americans what each entails and where the true interest of the United States lies.

Judicial Experience

To the Editor:

While you may make your own endorsements, a totally candid presentation in your Oct. 28 editorial would have noted that Florence Zimmerman, who is Margaret Taylor's Republican-Conservative opponent, for Judge of the Civil Court, 4th District, Manhattan, has had experience as a sitting judge of the Civil Court 1971-73.

Messrs. Clean

To the Editor:

I was delighted to read that York City was embarking on a massive educational effort to "love to cleanliness"—until I saw names of some of the leading wed guests.

I rubbed my eyes, but sure enothey included the redoubtable DeLury, boss of the Sanitation Workers Union, whose tender concern the sightliness of our metropolis embraced strikes and stoppages in the banner of "New Litter Free" and other public benefactions.

Also Paul Scrivane, erstwhile principal Sanitation Commissioner, local O.T.B. retail establishments, gulfs the sidewalks with betting and empty beverage cans the loof day. (This presumably holds for its other locations.)

Also the many landlords who reduce building-maintenance coverage to pile garbage and other oo' the sidewalk despite their knowledge that it cannot be picked up at least 48 hours.

A 'Neither' Vote for Sen

To the Editor:

Persons with a commitment to justice clearly have a difficult time in the New York senatorial race, cannot vote for Senator Buckley, opposes full employment and care for all, and who has announced that his re-election would be a vote for liberalism. On the other hand, cannot vote for Moynihan, whose ord of service and programs, as as the analysis which he pro- poses anti-bank, and no talk of "understanding" him can cloud record.

Unfortunately, in this election is no lesser evil. Regardless of one votes, the victor will be choice. Somehow, we must say the world. Therefore, I propose a vote for Senator. If there is a sufficient large gap between the total votes the Presidential candidates and the senatorial, since we do have the opportunity to send an acceptable Senator, we will at have sent a message. G.M. and the Inventor

To the Editor:

In his criticism of Ralph N. Jac H. Karlan states in a recent issue that General Motors was offering novel energy-absorbing system automobiles which was rejected, of "had," apparently because it "not invented here." As the director of G.M.'s New Devices Section, I responded to this submission, I like to correct several inaccuracies the incident he describes.

The submission was made by Karlan (which is not noted in letter) at two separate times, in 1965 and 1968. In 1965, G.M.'s New Dev Section explained that since the eral concept of spring-mounted bumpers was an old one with which were familiar, General Motors was interested in acquiring any rights in his specific design. Our disinte was based on what we felt was impracticality of the concept for a motive application, not because didn't think of it first.

In 1968, when Mr. Karlan wrote E. N. Cole, then president of Gen Motors, Mr. Cole did not reject it of "had," as Mr. Karlan states, submission again was directed to at which time we offered to evaluate construction specifications and drawings of an automotive application Mr. Karlan would send them and make a decision based on this specific data. Mr. Karlan did not reply, our knowledge, he has not pursued matter since that time.

Charges that corporations will accept ideas from inventors, because they were "not invented here" difficult to defend against, for put sentiment inevitably is on the side of the inventor.

We are all aware that G.M. has corner on technical innovations; what is precisely why we have a New Devices Section in the first place. This section evaluates approximately 5,000 submissions each year, many of which are only suggestions, without construction details. And when concepts about which the inventors feel strong are rejected, the cry of "not invented here" is not uncommon.

One final point: while Mr. Cole holds a substantial number of patents, Mr. Karlan is incorrect in stating that Mr. Cole "patented the air bag."

Philippines' Torture

When President Ferdinand E. Marcos imposed martial law in 1972, he gave the armed forces the power to arrest and detain indefinitely all persons suspected of insurrection or rebellion. In doing so, he has debased the Constitution that, like our own fundamental law, is concerned with the protection of individual rights and a system of checks and balances.

The Congress has been abolished, the judiciary rendered ineffective, and the President and his military leaders now rule without restraint. Anyone who opposes Government policies is vulnerable to arrest, and, without the right to due process of law, indefinite confinement, torture appears to be almost a routine part of the detention procedure.

Among those detained under martial law are members of the opposition party, former Congressmen, workers, students, farmers, journalists and clergymen. Many of the detainees, some of whom are barely out of their teens, have never been charged with a crime. Not one has been tried and convicted.

While denying the existence of routine torture in the detention centers, President Marcos has admitted that in four years under martial law about 50,000 people have been arrested for political offenses. The Government says that as of May 1975 all but a "mere" 6,000 had been released, but there are many who question that figure.

The Government also insists that it has extended "humane and decent treatment to detainees." Allegations of torture are "highly exaggerated," according to official spokesmen, and the cases that have been reported are aberrations that are being corrected. Indeed, since Amnesty presented its recommendations to Philippine officials, some of the prisoners mentioned have been released and at least four of the 88 torturers named in the Amnesty report have been arrested and charged with crimes. Nevertheless, numerous arrests have taken place in recent months and the use of torture continues.

President Marcos would like to project an image of legitimacy and responsiveness to the needs of his people. If worldwide attention is focused upon the suffering of political prisoners in Philippine detention centers, he may be forced to institute reforms that are no longer token, but real.

and Seoul unhappily canceled its French deal. But almost immediately afterward, the Franco-Pakistan accord was concluded—with no clause safeguarding copied reprocessing plants.

Washington appears to have insufficient diplomatic clout in Islamabad to induce it to emulate Seoul, and Paris has refused to void the contract, pointing out that it followed all guidelines agreed on in 1975 even if it didn't accept subsequent stipulations on reprocessing, which Pakistan spurned.

The United States Government is distressed by this, criticizing France, and fearing eventual tension in South Asia when both India and Pakistan have small stockpiles. The French resent any implication that they are either ignoring their obligations to the seven-nation cartel or endangering peace.

They argue that, in the end, the kind of warheads being made in India and ultimately perhaps to be exported in Pakistan could probably be no more dangerous to human life than the holocaust following partition of the subcontinent. This is cynical logic.

Nevertheless, the French say it is far more important to insure that neither West Germany nor East Germany nor Japan get into the weapons business, because that might upset the international balance.

Moreover, Paris is vitally interested in keeping its own prominent place in the world market for peacetime nuclear facilities. Having hardly any fossil fuels of its own, France is vigorously developing its own reactor program and hopes to help finance it with sales abroad.

Electricité de France, the energy conglomerate, now builds only nuclear plants. Already they produce something over 10 percent of the energy this nation requires. By 1985 nuclear power will provide about two-thirds of France's energy requirements.

While Paris has agreed to join the loosely constructed nuclear cartel, it has an old grudge against the United States on atomic matters. Although Free French scientists participated with Americans, British and Canadians working on the first A-bomb, Washington never qualified France as eligible for nuclear weapons or secrets following World War II—when it did so qualify Britain.

For years thereafter America had a near monopoly on uranium-enrichment processes and could thus enrich virtually all free world nuclear energy plants. In 1971 France broke the monopoly by contracting with Moscow to send natural uranium to the Soviet Union to be enriched, and then returned here. Moreover, the Russians gave better terms for the deal than the Americans.

Despite improvement in Franco-U.S. relations during the past few years and despite basic accord on the seven-nation cartel—a kind of branch of that nonproliferation treaty to which France doesn't adhere—the needless scorb argument now over Pakistan is perhaps of exaggerated importance.

THE ADVENTURES OF CANDIDATE-MAN

STAN LEE JOHN ROMITA

Against McCarthy

By Sam Brown

DENVER—"Some men would make great Presidents if you could appoint them," it was said of Adlai E. Stevenson. This could apply to Eugene J. McCarthy as well. But we don't appoint Presidents.

In 1968, I served as the McCarthy Presidential campaign's youth coordinator. No one who was involved can remember that time without gratitude for Gene McCarthy's challenge of the brutal Vietnam War and the attitudes that fed it, or without a special pride and fondness for the beauty, witlessness and camaraderie of that effort.

Lynndon B. Johnson had come to believe that he was the Government, and the Government acted (as it still does) on the principle that "the enemy of my enemy is my friend." We failed to take power out of the hands of that Government. The selection of Democratic National Convention delegates was rigged, but we began the work of unrigging that nominating system.

Today that war, dragged on by a Republican Administration, is over. And although there were not as many female, black and Hispanic delegates as there should have been this year, at least every Democratic candidate had a fair shot, with the delegates freely chosen in primaries or local caucuses.

Now Mr. McCarthy asks us to reject the party that we worked so hard to open and to follow him as we did eight years ago. He did not have a fair shot at the nomination in 1968. But he did run in the open Democratic primaries in 1972, and some people, including me, helped him. This year he did not compete. We owe him a great deal, but politicians must offer themselves to the people, and must accept the people's judgment.

Mr. McCarthy's 1968 supporters still care about the issues of racial equality, women's rights, health care, housing, jobs, tax reform, saving the cities, cutting back the military-industrial establishment, and the right of nations to make their own choices without United States interference.

Jimmy Carter is not good on every issue. But he is a decent man, and we can follow his own advice—to "hold my feet to the fire." The choice is plain: We can talk about issues or do something about them.

Many of us would have welcomed an independent McCarthy candidacy in 1968 challenging the war and the rigged nomination.

Mr. McCarthy concedes that he will not win this year, that he will take votes from Jimmy Carter, and risks returning Gerald R. Ford to office. I might be willing to accept that risk if support for an independent candidate would eventually bring about fundamental change, hard as this would be on the poor, old, blacks, farm workers and others who would eventually benefit from change.

But to form a basis for fundamental change, a candidacy needs at least three things: ideology, grassroots organizing, long-term commitment.

Mr. McCarthy takes many intelligent positions, but they do not amount to a coherent ideology. While some have been talking about "taking the rich off welfare," and others have been organizing under the slogan "Robin Hood was right," Mr. McCarthy has been defending the internal revenue code as a masterpiece of balanced economic policy.

Phillip A. Hart, the great liberal Democratic Senator from Michigan, said on returning from Robert F. Kennedy's funeral in 1968: "Whatever else they may say about Bobby Kennedy, he knew about the poor and the dirty, and your man [McCarthy] doesn't." Senator Hart voted for Mr. McCarthy at the 1968 convention. We were willing to overlook a lot then, but Mr. McCarthy still has his blind spots.

His 1976 candidacy is based on personality. In the 1968 campaign, we did grassroots organizing, some of it over his opposition. Many of us have continued organizing at the local level, working to build a progressive political base, while Mr. McCarthy has written and lectured most of the last eight years.

I see no long-term commitment in Eugene McCarthy's 1976 campaign. He is not building an organization. He has not demonstrated a staying power nor a willingness to spend time with ordinary people and incorporate their concerns into political work.

Mr. McCarthy's claim to election parity is that he sees himself as a giant in a world of intellectual pygmies. He may be more intelligent than either Mr. Ford or Mr. Carter, but he chose not to test himself in the primaries. In 1968 we called Mr. McCarthy "The People's Choice." This year, Eugene McCarthy chose himself to run for President; the people chose Jimmy Carter.

Sam Brown, former antiwar activist, is treasurer of the state of Colorado.

Davy Crockett, on Grinning

The mighty Tennessee hunter Davy Crockett served in Congress from 1827 to 1831 and again from 1833 to 1835. He was, like Abraham Lincoln, given in the tall tale, and once while a candidate for Congress he found that his opponent had a winning smile. He decided that the smile was costing him votes, so he made this stump speech about it:

"Yes, gentlemen, he may get some votes by grinning, for he can out-grin me, and you know I ain't slow. And to prove to you that I am not I will tell you the following:

"You all know I love hunting. Well, I discovered a long time ago that a coon couldn't stand my grin. I could bring one tumbling down from the highest tree. I never wasted powder and lead when I wanted one of these creturs. Well, as I was walking out one night, a few hundred yards from my house, looking carelessly about me, I saw a coon on one of the highest limbs of an old tree. The night was very moony and clear and old Rattler was with me. But Rattler won't bark at a coon, he's a queer dog in that way. So I thought I'd bring the coon down in the usual way, by a grin.

"I set myself, and after grinning at the coon a reasonable time found that he didn't come down. I wondered what was the reason and I took another steady grin at him. Still he was up there. It made me a little mad. So I felt around and got an old limb about five feet long and, planting one end on the ground, I placed my chin on the other and took a rest. I then grinned my best for about five minutes but the coon hung on.

"So, finding I could not bring him down by grinning, I went over to the house, got my ax, returned to the tree and began to cut away. Down it came and I ran forward, but damn if the coon was there. I found that what I had taken for one was a large knot on a branch of the tree and, upon looking at it closely, I saw that I had grinned all the bark off and left the knot perfectly smooth.

"Now, fellow-citizens, you must be convinced that in the grinning line I myself am not slow. Yet when I look upon my opponent's countenance I must admit that he is my superior. You must all admit it. Therefore be wide awake—look sharp—and do not let him grin you out of your votes."

This was drawn from the introduction in the forthcoming book "The Comic Mark Twain Reader," edited by Charles Neider.

Bad News From The Cellar

By Russell Baker

The campaign existed only on television. I could go to the cellar and light the box and, in the campaign would be right there. "Look," I would say to the cat, who always goes to the cellar with me when I descend for a stiff bout of television, "look, there is a man with immensely telegenic teeth in a northern snowstorm, and I'll bet he is running for President on our very own television box."

He was, of course. The cat knew it, and it hored her. All television politics bores her. She lives only for football, as the campaign lives only for television. Speaking confidentially, I do not like this about the campaign. It makes me suspicious. It is perfectly natural for Kojak to live only for television, but I became uneasy when I see a campaign acting as if it has Kojak envy.

This is why, back in January, I began keeping an eye on the campaign. Ah, those primaries! Night after night, down there in the cellar, and all those hundreds and hundreds of telegenic teeth getting on and off airplanes. But only on television! These embarking and disembarking teeth were as much a fixture of our cellar box as armistices in Lebanon and instant relief from acid indigestion.

When I pushed the button, they ceased to exist, those teeth. I would ascend to the upper world, race outside. The real world! Life! Life! I would be in contact with life out there. Real people with real dogs committing insouciant nuisances on the real sidewalks of New York. But not a single emplaning or deplaning jaw of telegenic teeth anywhere in sight.

Carter, Reagan, Ford, Udall, Bayh. Had I entered any of those great telegenic names in the real world, I should probably have been placed under observation for possible television fatigue, for everyone knew they had no more reality than the family hour, and considerably less than Mery Harman.

As the year wore on—wore on? Rotted away is more like it—I began sneaky reconnaissance sorties out of the cellar. By that time, both conventions had been held on television, and both parties had nominated the teeth of their choice. Surely, I thought, now the thing will have to make the leap from television to reality.

But no! When I closed the switch on Walter, John and Harry, the campaign vanished as rapidly as acid indigestion to the grip of the latest stomach-acid neutralizer. In the real world, not a single hillboard, not a bumper sticker, not a campaign button, not even a chintzy window poster proclaiming the excellence of these teeth as opposed to those teeth.

Nothing! Absolutely nothing! One day I saw a lot of policemen on York Avenue. They said they thought the President was planning to drive by. I wondered if he would be a little ten-inch President slightly out of focus with a chameleon complexion capable of unnering changes from green to orange around the cheekbones. I waited and waited, and after a while, noting that nobody else except the cops was waiting, I hurried back to the cellar where, in my time at all, I was able to see the President driving down York Avenue. He was only ten inches tall and was completely green.

The cat was disgusted with the increasing amounts of television time being consumed by the campaign. She did not share my alarm about the gravity of this development but simply showed her disdain by going to sleep at once whenever any of the campaigning teeth came on to discourse upon their owner's excellence.

Good citizenship—n't to mention reasonable paranoia—seemed to me to demand more aggressive measures. And so, after a long futile search for the campaign nut in the real world, I tried to telephone it.

"Campaign headquarters," said the voice at the end of the line.

"I want to speak to the campaign," I said.

"The campaign's out," said the voice. This was reassuring. "Out where?" I asked, thinking I might rush out in time to catch it and have a word with it.

"It's not exactly 'out,'" said the voice, "so much as it's 'in.' It's out being on television. If you get the nuance."

That was when Ford, Carter, Mondale, Dole and those League of Women Voters people all began lurking right inside the tube, just daring you to turn the thing on so they could go on and on for hours inside the box. It made you want to break down and cry. In fact, the cat did cry one night. I knew what she was thinking. These teeth are going to replace football on television, she was thinking, which will be like never having anything on the tube any more but important messages about acid indigestion.

I turned off the campaign and went up to the real world, leaving the cat to tears. It was very dead out there. End-of-the-world silence. And all up the block, blue lights glowing inside wind-drawn cells, everybody was locked in watching the campaign. Little ten-inch men doing tiny little media things inside little boxes. Inside little boxes! Little boxes! Boxes!

The main problem, Dr. Dantas explained, is that polluted air contains sulfur, and sulfur combines with water vapor to form sulfuric acid. The acid then turns the marble of the monuments to gypsum, a powdery substance that can be worn away by rain, wind or even casual rubbing.

Officials are particularly concerned about the sculptures that are still exposed on the hill. Two figures were recently removed from the west pediment of the Parthenon, or Temple of Athena. One is of King Kekrops, the legendary founder of Athens, seated on a snake; the other is his daughter, Pandrossos, who kneels with her arm about his shoulder.

Replaced by Glass Fiber Models
A third sculpture, a reclining woman known as Callirhoe, will be removed later. All three will then be replaced by glass fiber models now being cast in London.

The sculptures were "handled like a baby," said Dr. Dantas. They will rest on the rock surface of the hill until a small railroad track is built and they can be moved to the nearby museum.

The other pressing problem is the Erechtheum, a temple to Athena and Poseidon, finished in about 395 B.C. Its most striking feature was the six caryatids, large supporting columns shaped like young women.

One was carried off to the British Museum in the early 19th century and another was badly damaged, leaving four originals intact. Next year, these will also be moved to the museum and replaced by casts.

The porch of the Erechtheum is being redesigned so that the entire weight of the roof will be born by the copies of the two missing caryatids. It would be relatively easy to return the four real columns to their original place, once science finds a way to protect the marble against erosion.

Bus Lot to Be Moved
Meanwhile, officials have agreed in principle to forbid the use of low-grade heating oil near the hill, but have not yet worked out the details. They have also decided to remove a bus parking lot halfway up the slope.

Suggestions have been made to prohibit traffic in the Plaka, the old district at the base of the Acropolis and a center of Athens nightlife. Some classicists suggest expropriating large areas of the Plaka and restoring the ancient pathway leading up to the "high city," a controversial idea that has not yet received the blessing of Prime Minister Constantine Caramanlis.

Last year, tourists were prohibited from walking inside the Parthenon and other monuments. This year three million have already visited the Acropolis. Plans are being drafted to build pathways across the rocky surface and limit tourists to specific areas. In addition, the museum will eventually be housed in a new building nearby.

Mr. Smith Chops His Way Through the Jungle of Welfare

By TOM BUCKLEY
After eight months on the job, J. Henry Smith, the head of the city's Human Resources Administration, is being praised in some quarters as the very model of an efficiency expert and censured in others as a pussycat in tiger's stripes.

His supporters, including Mayor Beame and First Deputy Mayor John E. Zuccato, say he is working slowly and carefully to bring long-overdue reforms to the agency that administers welfare, Medicaid, day care and scores of other programs.

His critics, who include Richard V. Horan, the Inspector General of the state's Department of Social Services, and Stephen Berger, the executive director of the Emergency Financial Control Board, do not argue any lack of good intentions on Mr. Smith's part.

They contend, however, that he lacks the energy, the temperament and the inclination to chop heads and kick bottoms. That, they say, is the only way that the agency's laudable purpose of relieving human suffering can be carried out effectively.

Not Lost in Red Tape

Mr. Smith, the retired chairman and chief executive officer of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States and one of many businessmen who rallied to the service of the city in its hour of need, denied the other day that he was hopelessly lost in the red-tape jungle.

On the other hand, he acknowledges that he hasn't yet discovered all the trails, the water holes and the deep glades and dens where the idle and unproductive, the welfare cheats and the Medicaid parasites take their ease.

"What has disappointed some people was the assumption that coming from the world of business and having some reputation as a manager, I could revolutionize things in six or eight months to the point where tremendous savings could be achieved," he said.

The New York Times/Don Hogan Charles

"That is utterly unreasonable, and most of the people who talk about the job in those terms ought to know it is," he went on. "If they don't understand, I'm not going to worry about it too much."

While he is still finding his way through the agency, Mr. Smith is determined not to commit himself to actions that might prove to be difficult and expensive to reverse. Meanwhile, some

Secretary of State Kissinger wide speculation in He has indicated to confirm if President Ford wins election he will stay in his two more years. If Jimmy Carter, Mr. Kissinger will receive offers from publishers and may consider a move at Harvard. [1:4]

National teachers applauded President Ford's support with the Federal tax dollars. "You indicated, too experienced, too knowledgeable to simply throw your weight to the highest bidder," Mr. Ford told 4,000 members of the Wisconsin affiliate of the National Education Association, which has endorsed Mr. Carter. In a busy day, the President campaigned in Milwaukee, Cleveland, St. Louis and Houston. [1:2]

A steady attack on Republican economics was intensified by Jimmy Carter, who likened the Ford policies to the pre-Depression policies of Herbert Hoover and who warned of "more hard times ahead" if President Ford wins next Tuesday. Addressing a big, receptive audience in Philadelphia, the Democratic nominee derided Mr. Ford's assurance that the economy was improving. Mr. Carter also campaigned in New York, Toledo and St. Louis in a westward trek toward California. [1:3]

The Philadelphia rally posed a possibly disastrous threat to Mr. Carter's campaign in Pennsylvania. Mayor Frank L. Rizzo refused to attend because the Carter staff had invited some leaders of an abortive recall drive against Mayor Rizzo last summer. However, the Mayor was persuaded to meet Mr. Carter later and told him he would "win big" in Philadelphia. [1:5]

For broadcast advertising President Ford has spent $4 million more than Mr. Carter. The latest reports show that the Ford campaign committed $11.3 million, while his challenger spent $7.1 million. [1:4]

Metropolitan

Resistance to its securities is forcing the Municipal Assistance Corporation to turn to local banks and state-controlled funds to buy most of a new offering of $250 million in bonds. The corporation must raise cash for the state's needs next month, and its disclosure came as it sought to sell $110 million of the $250 million in new bonds for the first time since it was barred from the public credit markets 14 months ago. [1:2]

The senior citizens robbery unit of the New York City Police Department will be quadrupled to a total of 84 police officers, Mayor Beame announced. He denounced the recent rash of robbery-slays of the elderly as "the sickest and most repugnant kind of crimes." The Mayor urged the Legislature to allow judges to see juvenile records of youths over 16 who have committed serious crimes. [1:1]

Eugene J. McCarthy's bid to regain his place on the New York State ballot as an independent candidate for President was unanimously rejected by the United States Supreme Court. The action came less than five hours after he filed a plea with the court. [1:2-8]

Business/Finance

Economic statistics that have at times given warning of an economic downturn declined in September for the second successive month. The Commerce Department reported a drop of seven-tenths of 1 percent in its index of leading indicators. The report was cited by Jimmy Carter as new evidence that the economy was still in trouble. President Ford and his advisers discounted the significance of the report, the last broad economic index to appear before Election Day. [1:6]

In the agriculture sector of the economy, the Government reported that the average prices that farmers got for raw products declined 5 percent from Sept. 15 to Oct. 15. [2:3-5]

Banks across the country followed the lead of the Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Company by cutting their prime lending rate to 6 1/2 percent from 6 3/4 percent, the second quarter-point reduction in barely a month. Among those adopting the lower rate where the nation's two largest banks—Bank of America and Citibank. [2:5]

CORRECTIONS

An article in The Times yesterday incorrectly stated that the Ford Administration had authorized the sale to China of a type of a computer system denied to the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union is also getting a similar type of system. A corrective article appears on Page 6.

Because of a transmission error, the results of the Field poll on the Ford-Carter race in California were reported incorrectly in The Times yesterday. President Ford was preferred by 46 percent and Jimmy Carter by 40 percent, not 43. Three percent favored Eugene McCarthy, 3 percent favored others and 8 percent said they were undecided.

MYSTERIOUS SIGNAL UPSETS AIR WAVES

A Powerful Radio Beam, Believed to Come From Soviet, Upsets Communications of World

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29 — A very powerful, mysterious radio signal, apparently emanating from the Soviet Union, has been disrupting communications throughout the world for months, sources on both sides of the Atlantic say.

The interference caused by the transmissions is reported to be so severe that it has disrupted maritime, aeronautical, telecommunications and amateur radio operations to the point where certain channels have become virtually useless.

Since Aug. 25, the Federal Communications Commission has written four complaints to the Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications in Moscow, but so far has not had an answer, the sources said. The commission has several hundred complaints.

Several Unanswered Questions

Precisely what is generating the signals, what type of intelligence—if any—they are carrying out and what their purpose is are all unanswered questions.

Could the signals be worldwide coordination of interference reports for the International Amateur Radio Union, said in a telephone interview from his home in Leeds, England, that reports of interference from these transmissions have come from amateurs in Sweden, Norway, West Germany, the United States and Australia.

"The source of the problem lies in the U.S.S.R.," Mr. Thomas said. "There are thought to be three transmitters involved, but the purpose of the transmissions, this we do not know."

Mr. Thomas said that all of his interference reports were sent to the British Home Office, and that he understood that complaints had been telegraphed to the Russians. But, as with the F.C.C. complaints, there has been no answer.

So severe has the interference become—and how pervasive have the Russians been in complaints from other countries—that the matter has been referred to the International Telecommunications Union in Geneva.

Rene Fontaine, official spokesman for the telecommunications union, said he was unaware of the entire matter but added that the organization would not make public anything it might be doing. He said, too, that the union had no power to enforce international radio treaties against interference, but simply tried to negotiate such matters.

Nevertheless, another I.T.U. source said that the organization did have a file on the mysterious transmissions. He said correspondence had passed to the Russians through the I.T.U.'s International Frequency Regulation Board in connection with the matter.

Almost Daily Since July

King T. Hall, chief watch officer at the F.C.C.'s monitoring branch, said the commission had been getting complaints almost daily since early July. He said complaints had come from basically every shortwave radio user: aviation people for air-ground communications, maritime users—ship-to-shore operators as well as shore-to-ship and ship-to-ship—overseas point-to-point fixed radio services, such as those of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation and RCA Global Communications, Inc.

Although officials of all three companies said they knew nothing about such interference, a watch officer at the RCA ship-shore station in Chatham, Mass., said last night that over the last week or so several channels were completely unusable because of the interference. At the A.T.&T. station at Manhattan, N.J., an operator said the interference had been bothersome for some time, although he was uncertain of its source.

The primary source of complaints, Mr. Hall said, appears to be amateur radio operators, because there are more of them than there are commercial operators.

Mr. Hall said direction-finding equipment of the F.C.C. had confirmed that the signals emanated from the eastern side of the Baltic Sea.

Herbert Rothschild, Manufacturer Of Furniture and Art Collector, 84

Herbert M. Rothschild, a furniture manufacturer and art collector, died Thursday at his country home, He was 84 years old and a resident of Manhattan.

In 1934, he founded John Stuart makers and distributors of furniture in New York City and was its board chairman at the time of his death. Two years earlier, he had developed the concept of having furniture manufacturers, representatives make a complete showroom display of all their products available to interior decorators. He was managing director of the H. Hermann Furniture Company at the time.

Mr. Rothschild, who was also a vice president of the John Widdicomb Company, furniture manufacturers of Grand Rapids, Mich., helped introduce Scandinavian furniture and design to the United States.

Major Art Collection

It was under his direction that John Stuart started importing Danish furniture on a large scale in the 1950's.

As an art collector, Mr. Rothschild and his wife, the former Nannette Friend, assembled the Herbert and Nannette Rothschild Collection, one of the finest privately held collections of 20th-century painting and sculpture in this country.

The collection includes works by Braque, Boccioni, Gris, Picasso, Mondrian, Schwitters, Léger, Braque, Kandinsky, Delaunay, Gabo, Pichia, Kupka and other artists prominent in European avant-garde art. In 1966, the collection consisted of 180 paintings, sculptures and drawings.

Picasso drawings owned by the Rothschild were an important part of an exhibition put on at the Brooklyn Museum in 1956 in honor of the artist's 75th birthday.

Mr. Rothschild was active in the Society for Ethical Culture and served on its board of trustees for 50 years.

He was an honorary trustee of the American Federation of the Arts. In 1965, he conceived the idea of a "50th Anniversary of the Army Show of 1913 exhibit" by the Whitney Museum at the old armory.

Besides his wife, he leaves a son, Robert; two daughters, Judith R. Myer and Mrs. Roger A. Michaels; a brother, Jerome; a sister, Adele Berliner; five grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

Market Resisting M.A.C. Bonds; Agency Must Go to Local Banks mature next month—a maturity that is one of the last residues of the emergency assistance that the state provided to New York City at the height of the financial crisis last fall.

It was during that hectic period that the state borrowed $750 million on its own in order to advance payments to a cash-starved city on the promise that it would be repaid in 12 months.

The state has indeed been paid back $500 million so far, but the remaining $250 million is secured by long-term M.A.C. bonds that the state now has to convert to cash before Nov. 18, when its $250 million in notes falls due.

In a complicated series of transactions reminiscent of the struggles to raise cash for the state last spring, Albany fiscal aides have been working with the major New York City financial institutions to find customers for the state's M.A.C. bonds in time for the November deadline.

A month ago, State Comptroller Arthur Levitt expressed confidence that all $250 million could be sold in the normal market—that is, to banks and individuals who would willingly invest in them despite the controversies and troubles besetting the M.A.C. lately.

Since then, however, investment experts have decided that New York City's well publicized financial difficulties—plus the M.A.C.'s failure to persuade Moody's Investors Service to raise its credit rating—have continued to dampen the market's receptivity to M.A.C. bonds.

According to state officials, Governor Carey personally intervened and requested the state's commercial banks and savings banks to accept voluntarily some of the M.A.C. bonds for their own portfolios.

He was also said to have personally requested that Mr. Levitt drop his longstanding refusal to purchase additional M.A.C. bonds—which are backed only by the state's "moral obligation" to repay—for the state employee retirement systems for which he is the sole trustee.

PAUL WILLIAMS, REPORTER; WON 1973 PULITZER PRIZE

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Oct. 29 (UPI)—Paul N. Williams, a journalism professor at Ohio State University who was the winner of a 1973 Pulitzer Prize, died today at his home. He was 54 years old.

Mr. Williams received the Pulitzer Prize for leading a five-man team of investigative reporters with the Sun Newspapers of Omaha that produced a series of reports on the financing and operation of Boys Town. The prize was the first ever awarded to a weekly paper for investigative reporting.

Mr. Williams, then managing editor of the Sun Newspapers group, a chain of weekly papers around Omaha, joined the faculty of Ohio State later that year.

Mr. Williams attended the University of Kansas, Washburn College and the University of Nebraska. He worked for The Topeka State Journal, The Topeka Daily Capital and The Omaha World-Herald.

JUDGE JACOB LUTSKY OF COURT OF CLAIMS

Aide to 4 Mayors of New York City Is Dead—Was Popular Figure Among Government Officials

By MURRAY ILLSON

Judge Jacob Lutsky of the State Court of Claims, who entered city government nearly 40 years ago and served as a legal aide to four mayors, died yesterday at Long Island College Hospital after apparently having suffered a heart attack. He was 65 years old and lived at 162-01 Powell's Cove Boulevard, Beechurst, Queens.

At his death, Judge Lutsky was serving on a temporary assignment as an acting justice of the State Supreme Court, presiding over narcotics cases. The judge, who was once described as a "fanatic for work," had suffered four heart attacks in recent years.

Judge Lutsky was named to the Court of Claims two years ago after having served as a judge of the Family Court, to which he was appointed in 1965 by Mayor Robert F. Wagner in the waning days of Mr. Wagner's administration.

On Dec. 28, 1965, when one of his last official acts as Mayor, Mr. Wagner swore in Mr. Lutsky, more than 250-City Hall employees, and administration and Democratic officials, as well as a number of prominent Republicans, jammed the Board of Estimate room in honor of the new judge, who was known affectionately as "the building's oldest resident."

Entered City Service in 1937

Judge Lutsky, who received a Bachelor of Arts degree from Cornell University in 1931, his law degree from Cornell Law School two years later, entered city service in 1937 as associate counsel on the Board of Statutory Consolidation.

Within two years, he was made an assistant corporation counsel and was frequently called over to City Hall for special assignments by Mayor Fiorello H. La Guardia.

In the Air Force from 1942 to 1945, he went back to city service as an acknowledged expert in city finance, legislation and government operation. In 1947, Mayor William O'Dwyer made him his legal aide. That capacity, Mr. Lutsky was consulted on virtually every major move, including the recruitment of commissioners and judges.

Judge Lutsky served with numerous state and city committees and commissions, and dealt with state inquiries into constitutional debt limits, excise matters and school construction.

After serving as an adviser to Mayor Vincent R. Impellitteri, Judge Lutsky joined the Wagner administration and served as Mr. Wagner's legal aide for 12 years. A colleague some years ago said of Judge Lutsky that he had been "both adviser and chief governmental mechanic to every man he served."

Mayor Government Role

Under Mayor Wagner, he was delegated to the Board of Estimate and the Board of Estimate in the absence of the mayor and deputy mayor. With glasses pushed back high on his forehead, he would preside with an even hand at even the most difficult sessions. His only concession to that assignment was to put on a jacket. He normally worked in a short-sleeved summer shirt, which, it was said, saved him the time of rolling up his sleeves.

In November 1973, Judge Lutsky, who by then had been a Family Court judge for eight years, was one of five men picked by the then mayor-elect, Beame, to work out a transition with the outgoing administration of Mayor John V. Lindsay.

Judge Lutsky had lived in the Crown Heights section of Brooklyn when Mr. Beame was block captain of his block. At the time Mr. Beame picked him for his transition team, Judge Lutsky was described by one who had known him as "probably the earthiest" of the five appointees.

Judge Lutsky leaves his wife, the former Esta Botwinick; his father, Nathaniel Lutsky, two daughters, Susan and Phyllis; a brother, Irving Lewis, and two sisters, Lillian Berler and Ruth Lutsky.

A funeral service will be held tomorrow at 12:15 P.M. at Schwartz Brothers Memorial Chapel, 114-03 Queens Boulevard, Forest Hills, Queens. Burial will be at Mount Hebron Cemetery in Flushing.

Bertram D. Coleman, Ex-Broker, Dies in an Automobile Accident

Bertram D. Coleman, a retired stock broker, died Thursday in an automobile accident in Bryn Mawr, Pa. He was 57 years old and a resident of Bryn Mawr.

Mr. Coleman, a graduate of Yale University and the University of Pennsylvania Law School, was a partner in Drexel & Company here. In 1966 he became chairman of the firm of Drexel, Harriman, Ripley Inc. and subsequently served as chairman of Drexel, Harriman, Ripley Inc. until his retirement in 1972. The firm is now known as Drexel Burnham Inc.

He was in the Navy in World War II in the Pacific and was discharged with the rank of commander.

Before entering the securities field he was president of the Ebsenburgh (Pa.) Coal Company. He was also a director of the Western Savings Bank in Philadelphia, the Philadelphia Museum of Art, Great Realty Trust, Rockover Bros. Inc. and the Abithi Paper and Power Company, and chairman of Greenfield Realty Investment Trust.

He is survived by his wife, the former Patricia Diston; a son, William D.; two daughters, Carol and Marlene G.; and a brother, Francis I. G.

Airlines Waging Great Movie War

Airlines have vied for passengers with no-frills flights, piano lounges and leg room. Now they are engaged in a great movie war.

FORD MOTOR LINKS
24.5% DROP IN PROFIT
TO STRIKE BY U.A.W.

Earnings in the 3d Quarter Were $42.5 Million on Increased Revenue of $6.2 Billion

By REGINALD STUART
Special to The New York Times

DETROIT, Oct. 29—Citing the deep impact of a 28-day strike against it by members of the United Automobile Workers Union, the Ford Motor Company today reported a 24.5 percent decline in its profits for the third quarter of 1976, compared with the like period a year ago.
Earnings for the quarter ended Sept.
30, 1976 were $42.5 million, or 45 cents a share, on revenues of $6.2 billion, the company reported in its earnings statement released here. For the comparable period a year ago, earnings were $56.3 million, or 60 cents a share, on sales revenues of $6.1 billion.

For the nine months ended Sept. 30, however, Ford reported profits of $812.3 million, or $8.64 per share, on revenues of $21.6 billion, more than five fold for 1975. The comparable figures were earnings of $152.8 million, or $1.64 a share, on revenues of $17.5 billion.

The Ford Motor Company said its new contract with the United Auto Workers Union would raise labor costs by 13 percent in the first year alone.
David N. McCommo, executive director of financial analysis, said he could not tell whether or not the increased costs, including those for labor, may necessitate further pricing. Page 30.

The third-quarter decline by Ford was the first reported by Ford as a result of the strike, which lasted longer than most observers had expected. Earlier this week, the Chrysler Corporation, the third largest auto maker, reported record third-quarter earnings of $78.2 million, or $1.26 a share, on sales of $3.8 billion, compared with a loss for the like period in 1975. The General Motors Corporation, the nation's largest auto maker, reported third-quarter earnings of $37 million, or $1.37 a share, on revenues of $10.6 billion, a 63 percent increase in its quarter profits. The American Motors Corporation will not report earnings until next month.

Earnings Outside North America

Edward J. Blanch, vice president of finance at Ford Motors, said that all of the third-quarter profits were earned outside North America. "The profits of the United States finance and insurance operations were more than offset by the U.S. automotive losses," he said.

Financial observers have estimated that Ford lost as much as $80 million or more in revenues because of the strike. The company's earnings statement said that the strike by more than 260,000 automobile workers bargaining for a new three-year work pact, reduced North American production by 186,000 units. That amounted to a reduction in net income, based on company projections, of approximately $11.50 a share. Ford officials added that their net income for the final quarter would also be "depressed" because it expects to lose production of about 237,000 units during the fourth quarter.

Ford earned eight tenths of a cent on each dollar of sales after taxes, Mr.
Blanch said. That was the lowest return on sales in the past 15 years, with the exception of the third quarter of 1967, when the U.A.W. last struck the company.

Dow Rises 12.30 to 964.93
As More Banks Cut Prime

Wall Street Regards Lower Rates as Bullish Sign

By ALEXANDER R. HAMMER

nation's largest banks pushed the stock market sharply higher yesterday, the Dow Jones industrial average climbing 12.30 points to 964.93, its high for the day.

Prices on the New York Stock Exchange began moving higher early in the session after Citibank and Morgan Guaranty Trust cut the interest rate they charge their key corporate customers to 6 1/2 percent from 6 3/4 percent. Later in the session numerous other major banks followed suit.

On Thursday, the Continental Illinois Bank, of Chicago, became the first major bank to cut its prime rate to 6 1/2 percent from 6 3/4 percent. A reduction in the prime rate is bullishly interpreted by Wall Street as a signal of lower interest costs for business.

Election is Already Discussed

Eldon Grimm, vice president of Birt, Wilson & Company, said that the cut in the prime rate by the banks "was the main factor for the market's advance."
He added that the market had already discounted the outcome of the Presidential election.

Analysts noted that investors and traders also seemed encouraged by the acquinity with which the market took the news from the Commerce Department of a second straight decline in the Government's index of leading economic indicators.

The Government agency reported that its September index of indicators fell 0.7 percent. The September dip was identical to the revised 0.7 percent decrease in the indicators for August, which was originally reported as a 1.5 percent drop. The August drop was the first decline in the index in a year and a half.

Advances outnumbered declines by more than a 2-to-1 ratio yesterday. Twelve of the 15 most actively traded issues advanced, two declined and one was unchanged. Four of the most active issues gained a point or more. They included Dow Chemical, up 1 1/2 to 43 1/2; American Telephone, 1 1/2 to 34 1/2; Aetna, 1 1/2 to 34 1/2; and Gulf and Western, 1 1/2 to 16 1/2.

The volume leader was Exxon, which added 1/2 to 52 1/2 on a turnover of 228,500 shares. On Monday the oil producer reported a 4 percent decline in its third-quarter earnings, attributing the drop to fluctuations in foreign-exchange rates.
City Investing, also on the active list, gained 3/8 to 13. One analyst said that interest in the issue reflected the improved prospects of the casualty insurance and housing industry, in which City Investing has major interests.

Northern Natural Gas Gains

Many of the glamour and blue-chip issues made impressive advances. International Business Machines climbed 5 1/2 to 271 1/2; Eastman Kodak, 3 1/2 to 87 1/2; Walt Disney, 1 1/2 to 37 1/2; Digital Equipment, 2 to 15 1/2; Fairchild Camera, 2 1/2 to 44 1/2; Polaroid, 2 to 36 1/2; DuPont, 3 1/2 to 129 1/2; and Philip Morris, 1 1/2 to 60 1/2.

Northern Natural Gas, which reported lower third-quarter earnings on Thursday, moved ahead 1 1/2 to 41 1/2 in brisk trading.

Mobil Oil added 3/8 to 60 1/2. Earnings this week the company announced a 9 1/2 percent gain in third-quarter earnings and increased its quarterly dividend to 85 cents a share from 85 cents.

Standard Pressed Steel rose 1 1/2 to 34 1/2. On Thursday, directors of the company approved a tentative plan to buy

Pound Gain Cut After Denial Report of $10 Billion Loan Bid

PETER T. KILBORN
Special to The New York Times

Oct. 29—An unsubstantiated report that the British Government was to borrow $10 billion—perhaps to purchase oil—sent the pound on its sharpest rise today. But the currency fell when that rumor, like was disavowed.

The pound rose as high as $1.6070, the highest since $1.5865, an improvement over a record low yesterday of more than 3 cents under the level early today in Hong Kong.

Rise and fall illustrated how people and institutions are puzzled. And it also illustrated the Arab's influence on the pound.

Supporting countries, like many of the Arab nations, are puzzled to their central banks as once a rock-solid investment country to make, as gold once was partly for that reason it called reserve currency.

From $2.40 in Two Years
The pound is not so solid any more.
In two years it has plunged to its present level. That has brought bad news for the Arab.
In 1970, according to the Bank for International Settlements, the Arab oil exporters received 10 percent of the $3 billion in aid by the world's central banks.

Eastern countries hold such large shares of sterling in their currencies, until they finally gave up on the pound, they are reluctant to pay for their oil. The move would affect about 1,200 employees at the Westinghouse facility in Horseheads, N. Y., where the tubes are manufactured.

Westinghouse, one of the earliest companies in television, ceased manufacturing its own sets in the late 1960's. The company, however, continued to sell tubes to other manufacturers including the Magnavox Corporation and Motorola Inc.
Mr. Lego said that the industrial and government tube divisions also are at Horseheads. He added that over the last 18 months the entertainment tube division had "lost many millions of dollars."

Slump in Economy Noted
He said that in the last three years the slump in the economy had caused the Westinghouse domestic market for color television tubes to shrink sharply.
He added:

"This year the market appears to be rising but imports have more than doubled. We are also encountering increased freight and duty costs in the market in Europe.
In addition, our current prices are much lower than they were in 1973 and the cost of raw materials has increased significantly. We cannot pass those increases along to customers because over-capacity in the market just won't allow it."

Taking these factors into account, the net effect is that the color TV tube business is just not a profitable business for us to be in," Mr. Lego said.

Color TV Tubes

The Westinghouse Electric Corporation, the largest independent manufacturer of color television tubes in the United States, announced yesterday that it was going out of that business.

Paul E. Lego, general manager of the electronic components divisions told employees that the company planned to close down or sell its color television picture tube business by Dec. 1. The move would affect about 1,200 employees

Phoenix Steel Gets New Chief Officer, Promise of Credit

The Phoenix Steel Corporation announced yesterday the election of a new chairman and chief executive officer, a commitment from several banks to provide $37 million in new working capital and a loss for both the quarter and nine months ending Sept. 30.

The new chairman and chief executive officer is Philippe M. Kessler, who had been executive vice president of Cresol-Loire and Schneider S.A. of France, which obtained control over the financially troubled "specialty steel maker early this year.

Mr. Kessler said that the new credit agreements had been negotiated to supply Phoenix with a total of $37 million in working capital financing to replace previous credit commitments that were limited to an $18 million maximum.

Under the new arrangements, a group of French banks and their American affiliates will make available $27 million for three to five years at an interest rate approximately 1 1/2 percent in excess of the prime rate.

The company had a net loss of $5.36 million in the third quarter of this year compared with a net loss of $1.9 million in the period a year ago.

Prices Received and Paid by Farmers

The Agriculture Department reported that prices farmers get for raw materials and what they pay to meet expenses were down for the period Sept. 15 to Oct. 15.

Prices Received by Farmers Dropped 5% in Month

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29 (AP)—In its last major farm economic report before the Presidential election on Tuesday, the Agriculture Department said today that the average prices farmers get for raw products dropped 5 percent between Sept.
15 and Oct. 15.

The department's Crop Reporting Board said that lower prices for hogs, corn, soybeans and wheat contributed most to the decrease. Higher prices for oranges, grapefruit and lettuce helped offset the slide for other commodities, however.
As of Oct. 15, farm prices averaged 5 percent above a year earlier, the report said. They dropped in the previous two months, including a 4 percent decline from July 15 to Aug. 15 and another dip of one-half of 1 percent from Aug. 15 to Sept. 15.

Last spring farm prices rose for three months before leveling off in July and beginning their recent decline.

The report said that prices farmers pay to meet expenses dropped one-half of 1 percent from Sept. 15 to Oct. 15. By mid-month, those prices averaged 5 percent above a year ago.

Prices of farm products are important indicators but do not necessarily forecast food price changes from month to month.

Also, middleman charges for processing and selling food after it leaves the farm account for about 60 percent of the consumer grocery bill, and those expenses have increased steadily.

Retail food prices this year, however, are estimated to be up 3 percent, over the full 12 months, from 1975, when they dropped 8.5 percent. Food prices jumped 14.5 percent annually in 1973 and 1974.
Department experts say food prices through mid-1977 probably will continue rising at their relatively moderate 1976 pace.

The report said that farm prices of meat animals as a group—cattle, hogs and sheep—declined 7 percent from Sept. 15 to Oct. 15 and at midmonth were 9 percent below a year ago.

According to the report, the Oct. 15 farm price index for all commodities averaged 178 percent of a 1967 base used as a standard, compared with 186 percent in September. The report was 221 percent on Aug. 15, 1973.

The Agriculture Department reported that prices farmers get for raw materials and what they pay to meet expenses were down for the period Sept. 15 to Oct. 15.

Price-Fixing Laid
To 5 Bag Makers
In U.S. Indictment

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29 (AP)—Five manufacturers of paper bags were indicted today on Federal charges of conspiring to fix the prices of bags sold to package a variety of consumer products. The indictment was returned by a grand jury in the District Court in Philadelphia and announced in Washington by the Justice Department.

The defendants are the Continental Group Inc. of New York, the American Bag and Paper Corporation of Philadelphia, the Chase Bag Company of Greenwich, Conn., the Harley Corporation of Spartanburg, S.C., and the St. Regis Paper Company of New York. Seven of their executives also were indicted.

Bags Sold to Wholesalers
The defendants were charged with conspiring from at least as early as 1959 until the present to raise and fix the prices of the bags sold to wholesalers for packaging consumer goods.

The bags involved "are used for packaging a variety of products including others, pet foods, cookies, tea, coffee, Kitty Litter, chemicals and agricultural products," the indictment said.
"Consumer bags also include air-tightness bags," it added.

The five companies accounted for about $42 million in sales of those bags in 1974, the Justice Department said.

The indictment identified the individual defendants by titles they held during all or part of the more than 20 years covered by the charge.

dent and general manager of the flexible company this week by Joseph A. Burkhardt, William D. Loth and Martin O. Pattison. It describes the structure as made of vertical and horizontal tubes, some of which are compartmented ballast chambers or tanks that can be flooded or dewatered for positive or negative buoyancies.

Vertical tubes secure the structure to the sea floor, where it is anchored by piles. When operation is over, the structure is removed by severing the piles and dewatering the tubes to provide buoyancy.

Depending on results with the prototype, the tubular structures may be installed where the water is too deep for conventional production platforms.

Thermal Motor Converts Solar Energy

A thermal motor that converts solar energy into mechanical motion for such purposes as driving pumps was patented this week by two members of the staff of the Marshall Space Flight Center, Huntsville, Ala.

Leopold A. Hein and William N. Myers assigned patent 3,987,630 to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, which will grant licenses under it.

In addition to heated fluid, heat obtained directly from the sun can be used. The fluid goes through a spiral tube in a heat cycle and then passes through a cooling cycle, expanding and contracting. This movement causes an outer concentric cylinder to rotate on a disk plate. The reciprocating motion of the outer cylinder is then utilized to drive a pump.

According to the patent, earlier devices, designed to convert heat to motion lost a good deal of the heat and were fairly complicated.

Suntan Composition Screens Out Radiation

granted this week to Hugh Bradner of La Jolla, Calif.

The composition screens out the sunburn-producing ultraviolet radiation of natural sunlight, permits non-dangerous tanning wavelengths to pass through and contains a fluorescent compound that converts otherwise burning wavelengths into harmless forms that promote healthy tanning.

The patent is assigned to the Research Corporation, a New York foundation, which is prepared to grant licenses under it.

Real-View Mirrors For Cyclists, Athletes

For cyclists, runners and other athletes, two Ohio inventors have devised rear-view mirrors to be attached to eyeglasses, goggles, peaks of caps and other accessories.

David R. Chaney and David G. Wendel were granted Patent 3,988,058 this week, assigning it to the Safety Sports Mirrors Company, Chardon, Ohio.

The equipment is intended to grip the helmet or other piece of apparel firmly with strong but rubbery grips in order to avoid damage to the material or the wearer. A U-shaped mirror supporting arm has ball-and-socket connections to provide maximum adjustment of the reflector.

To get a copy of a patent send the number and 50 cents to the Patent and Trademark Office, Washington, D. C. 20231. Design patents are 20 cents each.

Texaco Profits Declined by 14.4% In 3d Quarter on U.S. Tax Charge

By CLARE M. RECKERT

Texaco Inc., the nation's second-largest petroleum company, reported a decline of 14.4 percent yesterday in third-quarter profits, unlike most other oil producers, which had earlier announced moderate to substantial increases over a year ago.

Exxon Inc., the industry leader, was one of the few to recede, with earnings off 3.8 percent primarily because of foreign-exchange translations.

Net income for Texaco came to $214.3 million, or 78 cents a share, down from $250.5 million, or 92 cents a share, for the corresponding three months last year.

Increased United States income taxes reduced earnings by $30 million this year under the revised foreign-tax credit provisions. Consolidated gross income was up 2.1 percent to $6.633 billion.

Third-quarter earnings reflected increased revenues from higher prices for petroleum products and natural gas, partly offset by lower sales volume.

Also there was a loss in natural-gas liquids production of about 14,000 barrels a day during the third quarter this year because of a fire in June at the company's Paradis plant in Louisiana.

Procter & Gamble Gains

Procter & Gamble Company, the nation's leading domestic merchandiser of soaps, detergents, toiletries, household products food and paper products, reported a 27.7 percent increase in earnings for the first fiscal quarter ended Sept. 30. They were the highest in the company's history as were the sales.

Higher unit volume at domestic and foreign operations and some increased selling prices for a number of products, and especially its Folger's coffee, which has gone up in price with most other brands, were reasons for the gain according to the Standard and Poor's analysis. Margins were wider in domestic operations, aided by the decline in the cost of some agricultural commodities and by many raw materials and supplies, along with improved production efficiencies.

Net earnings for the September quarter were $184.5 million, equal to $4.66 a share, up from $105.3 million, or $1.28 a share, a year ago, and with $1.04 a share in this year's June quarter, and $1.49 a share in the March quarter. Worldwide sales of $1.83 billion increased 15 percent over the September quarter of 1975.

Aetna Life Advances

Earnings of the Aetna Life and Casualty Company in the three and nine months ended Sept. 30 returned to more normal levels after two years of depressed results, the nation's largest investor-owned insurance enterprise reported. Net income for the company's entire business rose 104.5 percent in the quarter and 111 percent for the first nine months.

Net income for the quarter amounted to $87.8 million, equal to $1.64 a share, compared with $43 million, or 80 cents a share, a year ago. Operating earnings were up 182.5 percent to $85.8 million, or $1.60 a share. Realized capital gains included in net income were only $2.2 million, or 4 cents a share, this year compared with $12.7 million, or 24 cents a share, last year. Life, health and pension earnings were $28.7 million, up from $21.3 million while casualty and property were $58.4 million, up from only $34 million in the 1975 third quarter.

A certain manner of living demands a certain kind of personal account manager.

C. Walter Nichols III—a Vice President of Citibank. In his fourteen years with the bank, he has provided in a professional and sensitive manner a wide range of financial services to people of substantial means. Mr. Nichols is active as a trustee and director of civic and charitable organizations in the New York area.

For those few who enjoy a certain manner of living, Citibank has an ideal system for managing the financial complexities that accompany this way of life—the personal account manager.

Functioning with discretion and professionalism, he brings to your particular requirements all the resources and knowledge of Citibank: experts in investments; banking and the extension of credit; taxes; custody and management of unusual assets; trusts and estates; economics. He and his team of specialists work with you on any level you wish—managing your present affairs; helping you formulate plans for the future; or even preparing ideas for unforeseen contingencies. Probably one of the greatest assets of your personal account manager is his ability to serve as the hub—the focal point through which all your financial needs can be funneled and coordinated with your other advisors; lawyer, accountant, stockbroker, and even, in some cases, your family office.

This leaves you free to pursue your own interests, secure in the knowledge that everything pertaining to the financial aspects of your way of life is in responsible, dependable and trustworthy hands.

Should you wish to discuss any aspect of this program, please phone or write for an appointment with C. Walter Nichols III, Vice President, Citibank, 399 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10022. (212) 559-2727.

OF A PUBLIC HEARING APPLICATION FOR A RATE INCREASE

EDIE CROSS AND BLUE SHIELD OF GREATER NEW YORK
The Insurance Department will hold a public hearing on November 12, 1976 on an application for a rate increase that has been filed by Edie Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York. The hearing will be held at the New York County Lawyers Association, 150 West Street, New York City, beginning at 6 p.m. The hearing will be held in a room on the 11th floor of the same building.

The application indicates that the increase is composed of the following:
1. Increase of 18 1/2% to pay for increase of current benefits for all four coverages;
2. Increase of 5% for new state-mandated benefits for maternity in hospital and medical coverage;
3. Increase of 5% to restore statutory minimums for the following counties: Bronx, Westchester, Dutchess, Greene, Kings, Queens, Orange, Putnam, Rensselaer, Sullivan, Ulster and Warren.

The application and related materials are available for public inspection at the office of Edie Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York, 150 West Street, New York City. The rate filing is available on request to the public at the office of the Insurance Department, 110 Nassau Street, New York City.

Ford and Carter Buy TV Time On Election Eve for Final Efforts

By LES BROWN
As their final campaign effort on election eve, President Ford and Jimmy Carter have bought consecutive half-hours of network television time running throughout the prime-time schedule Monday night.

With Mr. Carter having the first half-hour on each occasion—the result of a coin-toss last August that had been won by Mr. Ford—the Democratic and Republican candidates will first take over the 8 to 9 P.M. hour on ABC, pre-empting "The Captain and Tennille," then the 9 to 10 P.M. hour on NBC, in place of the Monday night movie (NBC will follow with a news program on the campaign); and finally the 10 to 11 P.M. hour on CBS, pre-empting "Executive Suite."

According to officials of their respective advertising agencies, each candidate is to be represented by a single 30-minute broadcast that will be played three times over the course of the evening, once on each network.

Leaving No Time Untamed
The aim is to reach each of the evening's television viewers once with the final campaign message. Both sides consider it improbable that viewers would watch three different broadcasts by the candidates on the final night of the campaign.

The coin-tossing ceremony was held at CBS last August, when the two advertising agencies began their selection of time periods being made available by that network.

On winning the toss for election eve, Mr. Ford's advertising representatives surprised those of Mr. Carter by choosing the second 30 minutes of the hour.

"Very simply, we chose it to have the

Allocate nearly $135 million for management by new firms or institutions to be selected at the November meeting.

Retention of Citibank as a manager came as a surprise. Last year, the bank had been the target of attacks by municipal union leaders for refusing to extend credit to the city and for allegedly precipitating a number of near-default crises.

City Union Rejects Goldin In Bid to Drop Citibank As a Manager of Funds
Trustees of the New York City Employees Retirement System yesterday rejected Controller Harrison J. Goldin's recommendation that they drop Citibank as one of the four managers of $610 million of its funds.

Citibank was retained as a manager at the insistence of union representatives, but the trustees agreed to reduce the stock funds managed by the bank from $200 million to $50 million.

Despite the reduction, a spokesman for Citibank said it was "encouraged by the decision and pleased that the trustees have recognized our positive contribution to the management of the funds."

Mr. Goldin's recommendation to drop Citibank was based on what he described as its poor performance as a manager. The trustees went along with Mr. Goldin on four of his five suggestions. They were the following:

Drop the U.S. Trust Company, currently managing $110 million.
Allocate $125 million for investment by means of index funds of stocks representative of the market's averages.
Allocate nearly $135 million for management by new firms or institutions to be selected at the November meeting.
